BABS TO LEAD LONDON'S TEAM OF VOLUNTEER AMBASSADORS

COUNCILLOR WARNS OF HAVOC ON GYRATORY

Drivers face 'gridlock over new cycle lanes'

BY JACK DIXON

jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

PLANS to install special cycle lanes at one of Hammersmith and Fulham's busiest road junctions will cause "havoc" for drivers and hold up pedestrians, a local councillor has warned.

Transport for London's proposals to redesign the Hammersmith gyratory were overwhelmingly backed by members of the public in a recent consultation.

It aims to make the junction safer by creating segregated cycle tracks and separate traffic lights for riders.

But Councillor Charlie Dewhurst (pictured) slammed the "horror" plans and warned that drivers will face gridlock on the roads.

"Anyone who lives and works in the area knows all too well that the slightest problem on or around the gyratory causes havoc on our local roads," he said. "The knock-on effect from congestion at Hammersmith Bridge brings gridlock to neighbouring streets and makes our residential roads more dangerous for pedestrians and cyclists as frustrated drivers look for an alternative route." He added: "These plans will be met with horror by many residents in Fulham Reach and Barons Court whose streets quickly become gridlocked as traffic diverts away from the gyratory when there is congestion."

Cllr Dewhurst also said ambulances could face hold-ups accessing Charing Cross Hospital and that the extra cycle lane would slow down pedestrians on their way to Hammersmith Broadway.

TfL is pressing ahead with the gyratory redesign after the plans were backed by 79 per cent of respondents in a recent consultation.

A 750-metre two-way cycle track will be installed on the north side of the junction, with a new eastbound track along King Street.

A digital projection of how the new gyratory will look

A further eight cyclist signals are to be placed at the junction in order to separate bikes and cars.

Transport chiefs will also add pedestrian 'countdown' signals at several crossings and a new bus lane on Beadon Road.

They say the move will break down a "key barrier to cycling in west London" and encourage more people to get on their bikes.

Leon Daniels, managing director of surface transport at TfL, said: "The gyratory is currently a serious barrier to cyclists and removing this block from riding through Hammersmith and improving pedestrian facilities will help transform the area."

Construction is due to get underway next summer and could be complete within a year.

Sadiq Khan, the Mayor of London, last week urged TfL to make sure congestion was kept to a minimum while the work takes place.

Mr Khan's deputy mayor for transport, Val Shawcross (pictured), said: "It is an important and busy junction that needs to be made safer for the thousands of people who use it every day."

"The changes to the gyratory have to work for everyone and we have asked TfL to continue to work with local residents and look closely at the lessons from previous schemes to minimise disruption when the changes are made."

The Business View

Patricia Bench, Director of the HammersmithLondon Business Improvement District:

"As a cyclist, navigating the Hammersmith gyratory can be a daunting prospect so we are very happy that Transport for London has listened to local residents and businesses, the people who use this junction on a daily basis, to form their proposal."

"The BID is a strong advocate of green transport so a safer and more accessible gyratory will encourage more people to cycle to work and will have a beneficial impact on the area, together with new bicycle infrastructure to help cater for the increasing numbers of commuter cyclists."

"HammersmithLondon will continue to work closely with TfL to keep businesses informed as construction gets underway and help keep disruption to a minimum."

COCKNEY treasure Dame Barbara Windsor has been chosen by London Mayor Sadiq Khan to lead a team of volunteer ambassadors who are greeting visitors to the capital from around the world.

Dame Barbara has agreed to lead Team London's 550 "Ambassadors" who are out and about in the capital greeting visitors from around the world and providing them with information and local knowledge.

Throughout the summer the Team London Ambassadors, recognisable in their distinctive magenta uniforms, are providing maps, information and local knowledge from purpose-built 'welcome pods' stationed in a number of key tourist hotspots. Over the summer they will volunteer 15,000 hours over 4,000 shifts, helping more than 250,000 visitors.

Dame Barbara joined the Ambassadors in Trafalgar Square to help spread the Mayor's message that London is "open for all".

Food bank needs support

Food bank manager Daphne Aikens is predicting a spike in demand this summer

HAMMERSMITH and Fulham food bank is appealing for support to help struggling families this summer.

Organisers warn that the lack of free school meals during the summer holidays can pile the pressure on parents who already find it difficult to put food on the table.

The food bank provides emergency packages that can help to keep families going for up to three days at a time.

Food bank manager Daphne Aikens said volunteers were preparing for a "summer spike" in demand. "Many families rely on a daily free school meal and

Ade and Vic inspire elderly with music from around the world

BY JACK DIXON

jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

A MUSICAL duo who found inspiration in the elderly have teamed up to bring the sounds of Africa to Hammersmith and Fulham.

Adeyinka Akinwande and Vicknesh Visvanathan hope to brighten the lives of the borough's older residents as part of a unique community project.

Adeyinka, 35, grew up in Lagos, Nigeria, and has been performing in the African 'Yoruba Song' style for many years.

Working for a private care company, he enjoyed singing to his clients during his routine visits.

But he was inspired to turn the idea into a community service after meeting rapper Vicknesh, 46, at the Bush Theatre earlier this year.

The pair worked together on the theatre's neighbourhood project and teamed up to perform at the Hammersmith and Fulham ArtsFest in June.

Now they want to share their music with elderly people across the borough by touring care homes, community centres and hospitals.

Adeyinka, who has worked as a carer in Hammersmith and Fulham for the last eight years, said he also hoped to change perceptions about his profession.

"The stereotype that has been built about carers is that they steal people's money and abuse them. I want to change that," he said.

"Our clients should see us as friends and confidantes who appreciate their input in society.

"Any time I go into their homes I want to try as much as possible to please them. I want to give them a smile even if they are not happy at that moment. You can only please the spirit, you cannot please the flesh."

Vicknesh, who suffers from schizophrenia, has been rapping for the last 15 years and has recorded his music at two London studios designed specifically for people with mental health problems.

"Every time I perform I feel fulfilled. It just fills you up. I always say: do not chase the money or the fame, just appreciate the fact that you are being heard," he said.

"I am not ashamed to say that I have struggled with mental health problems and I have found ways to cope with them through music."

The pair performed for the first time at the Elgin Close Resource Centre earlier this year before staging a show at Askew Road Library.

Adeyinka performs poetry while playing the west African sekere instrument while Vicknesh raps his own lyrics – but the duo have also built an element of theatre into their performance to keep audiences entertained.

They say they do not want to turn the project into a money-making venture – only to share their music and offer a hand of friendship to the borough's older residents, many of whom have no relatives and suffer from loneliness.

"The people I look after, many of them have led bubbly, busy lives and suddenly something has happened to them and they cannot go out any more," Adeyinka added.

"Some of them see me as the closest person to them. They throw their joy at me when they are happy and when they are in a low mood they throw their anger at me.

"They used to be managers and do all sorts of different jobs but now they just sit and watch TV.

"We should not look down on them, we should involve them in things. I have one guy who is always singing even though he is sick and cannot stand properly.

"I do not want caring to be seen as just cleaning people's homes and tidying up their bedroom. I want to help people feel that there is life."

Vicknesh, who performs under the name 'Spiritual Don', said he enjoyed the "thrill" of performing to an audience of people who might not be familiar with his style of music.

"People at that time of life are approaching the end but still want to be appreciated. Some of them are 80 or 90 – we do not know what they have been through," Vic added.

"There is a fear in all of us about who is going to be there to look after us when we get old. We are becoming a selfish society."

MI5 recruiting

MI5 is recruiting young Londoners to become trainee Miss Moneypennys.

School leavers are being targeted in a drive to sign up apprentices to the intelligence service.

New recruits will work with MI5, MI6 and GCHQ to keep the country safe from terrorism and foreign spies.

Apprenticeship roles include language analysts, tech operatives, security officers and drivers.

It follows the deployment of 600 extra armed forces on the streets of London to combat lone wolf attackers and large-scale terrorist plots.

Starbucks dumped rubbish in the street and tidy, regardless of the size of the company."

Speaking at Westminster Magistrates court, District Judge Coleman said that Starbucks had acted in a "deliberate" manner, ignoring complaints from resident's associations and numerous warnings from Westminster City Council.

She did not accept the mitigation submitted by Starbucks that head office hadn't been aware at the appropriate times due to internal procedures.

Westminster City Council had written to Starbucks head office on a number of occasions to raise the issue.

Judge Coleman added that there was a "history of non-compliance" from Starbucks and noted the "prestigious" location and impact on the "local amenity".

There are two regular collections in Berkeley Street at 7am and 6pm, Monday to Sunday. Businesses are expected to put rubbish out no more than 30 minutes prior to the collection time and waste should stay on the street for no more than two hours.

However, rubbish was seen dumped on the streets just after midday on a number of occasions and waste bags were observed spilling and leaking onto the public highway.

Rubbish was also seen left out through the night in what is one of Westminster's busiest night-time economy hotspots.

Councillor Melvyn Caplan, Westminster City Council cabinet member for city management, said: "Keeping Westminster's streets clean is a busy job which requires a huge amount of effort from council workers, residents and businesses.

"Hundreds of thousands of people from all around the world visit Westminster every day. A lot of them are likely to stop and enjoy a coffee, but not many of them want to pick their way through piles of rubbish."

Starbucks pleaded guilty to 4 offences under the Environmental Protection Act and were fined £40,000 for each, plus £3,501.17 in costs and a £120 victim surcharge. The fine was reduced by a third on the basis of the guilty plea, from £60k per offence. The company are to pay the amount in full within 28 days.

Bard's wreath

WESTMINSTER Abbey marked the 400th anniversary of the death of William Shakespeare with a wreath laying during Matins on Sunday, August 7th.

The service was led by the Reverend Jane Sinclair, Canon in Residence, and the sermon was given by the Reverend Dr Paul Edmondson, Head of Research, The Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

During the service, Peter Holbrook, Chair, The International Shakespeare Association, laid a wreath at the Shakespeare memorial in the South Transept. Dame Janet Suzman, actor, read Prospero's speech from Act IV, scene i of The Tempest.

Increased security as the night tube comes on line

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynnews.co.uk

POLICE and Transport for London are promising passengers there will be heightened security with at least an extra 40 officers deployed when the Night Tube is launched on Friday.

The extra officers, who will patrol the stations and platforms and travel in carriages, may be backed-up by armed police.

"We will be working hard with our policing partners to ensure the Tube network remains a safe, low crime environment," said a TfL spokesman.

"More BTP Police Community Support Officers will also be out on the network to assist passengers, and support police officers, as required."

A BTP spokesman confirmed that armed officers could be among the Night Tube support teams, with additional armed back-up from the Met if required, but would not give details due to the sensitivity of revealing police operations.

The first Night Tube services will launch on the Central and Victoria lines, providing a 24-hour service on Fridays and Saturdays

"London is already a 24-hour city, and thanks to the huge investment to modernise the Underground, we are now rolling out a 24-hour Tube to match," said the spokesman.

"The Night Tube will cut night-time journeys by an average of 20 minutes, with some cut by more than an hour. It will also play a vital role in opening up London's night-time economy, supporting almost 2,000 permanent jobs and boosting the economy by £360 million.

"Demand for a 24-hour Tube service is clear - late night Tube use has increased at double the rate of day-time trips and Night bus usage has risen by 173 per cent since 2000."

TfL chief Mike Brown said: "The Night Tube is good news for London. More than half a million people use the Tube after 10pm on Fridays and Saturdays, and the introduction of the Night Tube, which will support London's businesses and jobs, is a historic step in our modernisation of the Underground and our work to support London's economic growth."

It will go live on the Central and Victoria lines next week, with Piccadilly, Jubilee and Northern lines to get the 24-hour service in the autumn. When the service is extended to the additional lines, the police presence on the Night Tube will be increased to more than 100 officers.

From Friday's launch there will be six trains per hour on each line between 00:30am and 05:30am.

Trains will run on the entire line on the Victoria line, on average every 10 minutes. On the Central line trains will run approximately every 10 minutes between White City and Leytonstone and approximately every 20 minutes between Ealing Broadway to White City and Leytonstone to Loughton/ Hainault. There will be no service between North Acton and West Ruislip, Loughton and Epping and Woodford and Hainault.

Fares will be standard off-peak for travelling on the Night Tube. Day Travelcards are valid on the day of issue (using the date printed on the card), and for journeys starting before 04:30 the following day. For example, if you buy a Day Travelcard at 11:00 on Friday, you can use it until 04:29 on the following Saturday. Daily capping on Oyster cards and contactless payment cards also applies.

"All stations will continue to be staffed by London Underground employees while train services are running, just as we do in the day. Staff will be visible and available to help with any queries," said the TfL spokesman.

"We are sensitive to the potential of additional noise and disturbance created by the Night Tube. We have carried out a thorough assessment of noise issues alongside local authority Environmental Health Officers and have undertaken an enormous amount of work to the tracks to mitigate any noise issues before the service begins.

"Once the Night Tube is operational, we will continue to work with residents to investigate any issues regarding noise. We will also ensure that any station announcements do not cause excessive noise levels."

From Friday the following bus routes will run 24 hours a day on Friday and Saturday: 34, 123, 145, 158, 296, E1, W3 and W7. These services will run twice an hour through the night, with W7 running three times an hour.

Piccadilly is the 'ideal location' for new independent school

THE independent sector schools group, Minerva Education, has announced the launch of a brand new senior school in Piccadilly.

Adding to its existing group of six independent schools, Minerva has agreed a 30-year lease term on the Grade I listed building, located at 106 Piccadilly, opposite Green Park.

The site - which was previously home to Limkokwing University - will now be transformed into a much-needed new independent senior school, to be named Eaton Square Upper School, Mayfair.

Philip Williams will assume the role of head teacher at the school, which is due to open in September 2017.

Having achieved a first class degree in Mathematics and Philosophy at Merton College, Oxford, Mr Williams brings over 20 years of experience in the education sector.

Tommy MacDonald-Milner, CEO at Minerva Education, said: "We're thrilled to welcome Philip to the Minerva Education team. His impressive background and wealth of experience will be invaluable in making the new school successful and we're very excited to get refurbishments under way.

"106 Piccadilly is a fantastic property right in the very heart of London. There is a gap in the market for a much-needed new senior school and there is no doubt this is the perfect location - it will make a convenient, accessible and stunning addition to our portfolio. Under the guidance of Philip, we're confident it will provide fantastic opportunities for local students.

"Ultimately, we aim to create a nurturing environment in which well-rounded, considerate, confident and resilient children will prosper, fulfilling their best potential personally and academically." A spokesman added: "Eaton Square Upper School will cater for 420 students aged between 11 and 16 years old and will provide its students with high quality education thanks to cutting-edge classroom resources and specialised learning spaces. Some of the new facilities on offer will include a purpose-built refectory, fully equipped science and design & technology laboratories, and specialist music rooms.

"Students will also be able to enjoy the beautiful Green Park for physical education classes and outdoor learning sessions. The school will be co-educational and academically non-selective, with the same family-focused ethos that the education group's schools pride themselves on."

33,000 sign up to save Soho's Tin Pan Alley

London is rocking too.

"The Save Tin Pan Alley campaign already has over 33,000 supporters and around 17,000 of them are musicians, mainly guitarists.

"We are calling on all of those guitarists and every other guitarist in the city, of all ages and abilities, to come together to form the world's biggest band and make a stand for Denmark Street."

Mr Scott-Irvine was inspired to stage the ambitious protest by a recent concert in Italy where 1,000 musicians came together to perform the late David Bowie's hit Rebel Rebel.

"It was a night of massed guitars and I thought 'let's do this for Denmark Street'", he said.

It would not be the first time that thousands of guitarists have been called together to perform. The current world record for the most guitarists playing together is held by the Polish town of Wroclaw, where 7,344 guitarists teamed up to perform Jimi Hendrix's song Hey Joe.

Similar massed guitarist events have also been staged in Canada, Texas and Germany. The current UK record for the most guitarists playing together is held by the Dorset seaside town of Lyme Regis, where in 2014 some 3,000 guitarists performed at the resort's annual Guitars On The Beach event, playing Deep Purple's Smoke On The Water and led by the band's singer Ian Gillan.

Mr Scott-Irvine revealed: "The plan is to get thousands of guitarists to play three classic hits which were recorded in Denmark Street - The Kinks' You Really Got Me, Black Sabbath's Paranoid and Not Fade Away by The Rolling Stones.

"We're going to ask the guitarists of those bands, plus many other star players to take part and we want guitarists from all over London, the UK and from anywhere in the world, to join them. We need to make a big noise about keeping the music in Denmark Street, it's been the guitar centre of rock and roll and we can't let it die."

Mr Scott-Irvine originally planned to stage the biggest band show, which would hopefully be televised, at the 1,700-capacity Roundhouse. But if enough guitarists join up it could be played at the 12,500-capacity Wembley Arena or even the O2, which holds 20,000, or in Hyde Park. Pop up nudist terrace in shadow of Big Ben

Cocktails are served! The nudist roof terrace opened by NOW TV which overlooks the Houses of Parliament

LONDON'S first nudist roof terrace is hoping to get bums on seats following its opening last week.

Guests won't need to dress to impress as they are encouraged to bare all and enjoy views of Big Ben and other central London landmarks.

Erected in Parliament Square, the new 'pop up' venue includes an open-air bar, sun-bathing areas and the opportunity for a bounce on its trampoline, or a round or two of swing-ball.

Organisers are hoping the sun terrace won't get too steamy, with London preparing for a blistering heatwave.

The 60ft high rooftop venue, which also boasts views of Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament and the London Eye, was opened by NOW TV last week.

It follows new research that found young Londoners were avoiding being 'tied down' in life more than people did 30 years ago.

The current generation of 30-year-olds have had 38 per cent fewer serious relationships than people in their 30s in the 1980s did.

The research of 850 people in their 30s and 850 people in their 60s also found the modern 30-year-old has lived in 28 per cent more countries and worked for 15 per cent more organisations than the previous generation did.

NOW TV is expected to open the venue to the public again over the course of the summer.

The shame of not paying the minimum wage

There are plenty of things most of us are glad have been consigned to the history books, but it appears some companies still have their feet firmly in the past when it comes to getting a fair day's pay for a fair day's work.

Personally, I love a bit of history. I live and work in one of the world's most historic cities and marvel, for example, at its unbelievable architecture from the last few centuries every time I drive around London.

That of course, doesn't mean that I want to return to the Victorian or Edwardian eras when it comes to how we treat workers. Unfortunately, some appear to be more at home in Ebenezer Scrooge's candlelit, freezing-cold office than a 21st century workplace.

I nearly choked on my bacon sarnie the other morning when I heard that almost 200 businesses had been caught by HMRC for not paying the minimum wage. And let's be clear about this, I'm not even talking about the £7.20 Living Wage, but the actual Minimum Wage, an hourly rate that has been in place since 1999.

Nearly 700 firms have been caught bang to rights for not paying the Minimum Wage since the posse made up of the Department of Business, as was, and HMRC started to round them up in 2013.

And just like cattle on the open range, these businesses have been branded by having their names and how much they owe plastered across the media.

The Department of Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy's 'list of shame' is the largest ever published and contains 197 firms from all walks of business.

And, to be fair, it's not the case of it being the 'usual suspects' businesses expected to exploit their staff; it truly is a mixture of the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker.

From civil engineering firms and hairdressers, to takeaways and children's nurseries, the shame of not paying staff the minimum, let alone what they're worth, isn't restricted to a handful of sectors or even geographic regions. There's even, I'm sad to say, a couple of plumbing firms in there, which boils my blood as you'd imagine.

Between them, all of these employers owed nearly half a million quid in arrears, which they have to pay directly to the employees affected.

These firms, and I'm sure there are plenty more out there waiting to be snared by the Government's lasso, have to realise the damage they are doing to the economy and society.

The ability to earn a fair day's pay that enables someone to put a roof over their head, feed themselves and their family and perhaps buy a few luxuries every now and again is every person's right. It's the foundation on which our free enterprise society is built and encourages people to better themselves and develop a career.

However, if businesses hold back from paying the Minimum or Living Wage, it forces employees below the poverty line or they have to rely on in-work benefits to top up their income.

Essentially, companies that fail to pay the minimum wage are basically being subsidised by government. It's allowing them to keep more money in their pockets rather than properly paying the staff that actually bring the cash in through their hard work.

Hopefully, by continually naming and shaming these rogue firms, we might actually get to the point when the practice of robbing employees of what is morally and legally theirs is truly part of history, and we can at last close the book on this shameful chapter.

Serpentine swim festival

SWIM Serpentine, the brand new two-day swimming festival from the organisers of the Virgin Money London Marathon and Prudential RideLondon, will be held in the heart of London over the weekend of September 24th/25th.

The first day of the event will feature thousands of amateur swimmers challenging themselves to a one mile open water swim in the iconic Serpentine Lake in Hyde Park, the venue for the open water swimming competition during London 2012.

All swimmers in the one mile event must wear either a wet-suit or tow-float, both of which will be available for hire on the day.

Gender-neutral campaign at City Hall

LONDON Assembly Member Sian Berry is calling on Westminster City Council to follow City Hall in battling against discrimination by removing names for recruitment processes and introducing gender-neutral options on official forms.

She is also urging Hammer-smith and Fulham and Kensington and Chelsea to do the same.

"Sian believes that these changes will help improve privacy and data protection when filling out forms and make it harder for deliberate or unconscious discrimination to affect employment decisions," said Ms Berry's spokesman.

Cllr Berry has already won the agreement of the Mayor to introduce the following measures at City Hall:

◆ Giving people the option not to reveal their gender when filling in forms to access services, including a choice of gender neutral titles.

◆ Name-blind shortlisting processes when recruiting staff.

Ms Berry said: "Disappointingly, I have found bad practice on many public sector websites, requiring gender details when asking people to fill in forms just to access services like parking or to leave comments on planning applications.

"People should not have to choose between male and female when giving their personal details to public bodies. And people should not be subject to discrimination when applying for a job because of their name.

"These tiny changes to the current processes would be a step in the right direction to be more inclusive to all of the residents that councils represent.

"The Mayor has responded positively on these issues. I hope that London's councils, if they are not already doing this, make these simple improvements to be more inclusive to all Londoners."

In response to written questions from Sian Berry, the Mayor has promised to review the information that is currently required on forms across the GLA group and consider any necessary changes to make them more inclusive.

The Mayor has also agreed to begin using name-blind recruitment in City Hall.

"Many people, including many non-binary, intersex and transgender people, may prefer not to select a gender when filling in a form, or may wish to use a gender-neutral title when giving information," said Ms Berry's spokesman.

"Public bodies are also required to follow data protection principles and avoid collecting information that isn't necessary."

In October 2015, a number of public and private organisations, including the Civil Service signed up a pledge to recruit on a name-blind basis to address discrimination. Despite this, a review of the GLA group of organisations recently found several examples of bad practice, including the form to leave comments on the GLA's own website.

Assembly members call for general election date - NOW!

LONDON leaders are calling on Prime Minister Theresa May to fix a date of the next General Election now, even though it is set to be four years away.

London Assembly members argue that they want advance warning, because if the General Election clashes with their own scheduled election it could be too "confusing" for voters whom they fear cannot tell the difference between their local MP and the capital's elected reps.

The date of the next London Assembly election is Thursday May 7th 2020 - the same day as that scheduled for the General Election under the Fixed-term Parliaments Act of 2011.

Although Mrs May could call an election earlier, in the event of MPs passing a vote of no confidence in the Government or if two thirds of the House of Commons back such a plan.

The Assembly wants the Government to name the day in case the date for the London elections has to be changed.

"In 2020, London may have to juggle its own elections at the same time as a General Election - something the London Assembly Election Review Panel says could be a perfect storm of election complications for Londoners," said an Assembly spokesman.

The May 2016 Mayor of London and London Assembly elections saw a turnout of 46 per cent - the highest ever for a London election. The implications of a General Election and the London elections on the same day represent a huge challenge and a major resourcing issue.

"It will make the whole process of planning, preparing and implementing the election more complex given the scale and the different types of election methodology which apply."

Election Review Panel Chair Len Duval said: "The London elections are the most complex in the UK. They involve four votes, three ballot papers, three voting systems, eight million votes, the distribution of six million information booklets, 4,000 polling stations, the coordination of 12,000 staff and a budget of £18 million over four years.

"If the General Election is to happen at the same time as the London elections, we need to know now. These things take years to co-ordinate. Contracts need to be procured, plans take two to three years to put in place and a 'wait and see' attitude is not an option.

"The Government needs to make a call. Are we running both elections at the same time, or are we rescheduling the London elections, to avoid a perfect storm of confusion for voters? The call has to be made and it has to be made within the next six months. We need a decision soon."

New Duke faces strong opposition to demolish Belgravia timber yard

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

THE new Duke of Westminster, 25-year-old billionaire Hugh Grosvenor, is to start his new role with a fight with businesses, residents and local societies who are fiercely opposing plans by the Grosvenor Estate to knock down Newson's Timber Yard on Pimlico Road, Belgravia, in order to build homes for the rich.

The developer plans to turn the space into expensive residential and large retail units, removing the oldest functioning timber yard in the country and six independent retailers and threatening more than 30 local jobs.

The new Duke, who is godfather to Prince George, inherited the title and an £8.3 billion fortune last week after the sudden death of his father. He now becomes Britain's third richest man.

Gerald Cavendish Grosvenor died aged 64 at the Royal Preston Hospital in Lancashire last Tuesday after suddenly becoming ill on his Abbeystead Estate.

A close friend of the Royal family, he became the sixth Duke of Westminster in 1979. He had four children and his only son, Hugh now takes control of a massive property empire. Among properties across the UK, he owns 190 acres in Belgravia.

The Grosvenor Estate is an international property portfolio, which manages assets of £11.8bn in more than 70 cities.

These include:

- ◆ Eaton Square, Belgravia.
- ◆ Parts of Mayfair.
- ◆ Parkside Place, 99 apartments in
- ◆ Cambridge city centre
- ◆ Westminster Terrace, a 33-storey tower in Hong Kong
- ◆ Retail, office and residential properties in Vancouver
- ◆ Grosvenor Place Kamizono-Cho, a residential block in Tokyo.

Following the shock news of the Duke of Westminster's death, a Buckingham Palace spokeswoman said: "A private message of condolence has been sent by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh."

A Clarence House spokesman said the Prince of Wales and Duchess of Cornwall were "deeply shocked and greatly saddened" by the sudden death of their friend.

The Grosvenor family accrued much of their London wealth through the marriage of Sir Thomas Grosvenor to the heiress Mary Davies in 1677.

According to the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography she brought Grosvenor "the estates which would become the cornerstone of the family's later wealth".

The estates were described as Ebury Farm, east of Chelsea, and a large holding between Tyburn Brook and Park Lane.

Educated at Harrow School, where he gained two O-levels, the duke once said that "academic studies came very low down on the list of priorities, games were very much my first priority".

The duke even had trials at Fulham FC, but his father is said to have disapproved of football as a career choice for an aristocrat. He later worked on ranches in Australia and Canada before serving an informal apprenticeship in property management.

The duke abandoned his dream of a career as a soldier in 1973 on becoming trustee of the Grosvenor Estate aged 27, but signed up to the Territorial Army and in 1994 was made an OBE for his work in the volunteer force.

The duke was known for his strong views, and was an advocate of change in the Lords. He quit the Conservative Party in 1993 after it proposed the Bill on Leasehold Reform, which would have had a huge effect on his massive London landholdings.

He also paid thousands to some of his workers to help them meet the poll tax, introduced by Margaret Thatcher, which he described as "insufferable".

The duke also insisted that he would "rather not have been born wealthy", and once said his life would have been easier if he had sold his estate to live in the Bahamas. However, he went on to say that he could not do that because it "would not be responsible".

Now the responsibility of running the Grosvenor Estate passes to his young son and one of the first tasks ahead of the friend of Prince William and Prince Harry will be to sort out the row at Newson's Timber Yard.

"The Grosvenor Estate has been opaque in providing detail on what the two 10,000 square feet megastores will be filled with. The space, much larger than other retailers on the street, will force up rents and force out local retailers," said a spokesman for the local campaign for the yard to be awarded protected status as an Asset of Community Value.

"Newson's Timber Yard is of particular historic interest, central to the heritage of the area, the oldest still functioning on its original site in the UK and should be protected for its architectural integrity.

"The employees at the timber yard contribute a combined total of 168 years local service, with one employee having served over 32 years at the yard."

Newson's Timber Yard has been in commercial operation for over 175 years, and provided the materials needed to build the Belgravia we know today.

Its commercial value continues and supporters say it is a vital ingredient for local businesses, providing them with the necessary specialist timber mouldings and materials to operate, including the Chelsea Flower Show, local craftsmen, businesses and retailers in Belgravia.

"Six independent retailers will be demolished to support the development - this will have a destructive and detrimental impact on their businesses, homes and livelihoods," said the spokesman.

The Belgravia Society, The Belgravia Residents Association and The Pimlico Road Traders Association are all against Grosvenor's redevelopment and have also written letters in support of the Belgravia Society's application for Newson's Timber Yard to be made an Asset of Community Value - an application to which Westminster City Council have yet to respond.

"Grosvenor's offers to relocate the businesses affected by the proposed redevelopment have been calculated and hollow," said the campaign spokesman.

"The alternative premises they have suggested have been wholly unsuitable; the rents have been nearly four times higher than retailers are currently paying and they are not offering leases with security of tenure, even to a business with a 175-year heritage.

"Grosvenor sought to use Travis Perkins to leverage support for their redevelopment proposals. Grosvenor made several public statements to the effect that the timber yard would be relocated, when in reality Travis Perkins/Newson's had declined the alternative site given it was not suitable."

Travis Perkins have engaged with the local community and in response set up Save Newson's Timber Yard, a campaign to raise public awareness about Grosvenor's plans. The campaign is urging residents and the business community to sign a campaign petition and write letters objecting to the redevelopment to Westminster City Council.

A Travis Perkins spokesman said: "We have played an important role in maintaining the continuity of the Pimlico Road timber yard in its original function from its inception 175 years ago and want to continue this service.

"It makes no sense to push out successfully operating businesses from communities that need them. The yard plays an integral role in supplying local craftsmen, businesses and independent retailers in Belgravia and should not be forcibly closed in favour of large retail units that are not wanted locally.

Travis Perkins have engaged with the local community and in response set up this campaign to save the timber yard - urging people to sign the petition, write letters objection and support the Belgravia Society's application for the yard to be registered as an Asset of Community Value."

A decision on the controversial redevelopment plan will be made by Westminster City Council in September.

Very best of standards at Chelsea pool

IT would be a great shame if users of a fantastic community swimming pool were put off by lurid headlines that bear little scrutiny (Parents' fears over 'pool for perverts' at sports centre).

I want us to provide the very best standards for everyone who uses Chelsea Sports Centre, not just the equipment and pool but also the areas where swimmers change.

Needless to say we would never approve a design that exposed anyone, much less children, to unwanted attention. Indeed, we are providing a number of dedicated family changing cubicles in addition to the general cubicles.

So what have we done? Well we began by asking pool users what they thought of our plans for the pool changing rooms. I am pleased to say that many supported our idea.

In fact, we have based a number of the changes to the new layout on comments received from regular swimmers. Indeed, many of the schools and clubs (who make up 75 per cent of the users) told us that for their pupils to have to change in a corner of the changing rooms where other adults were also changing was not ideal.

In addition, I have been approached by mothers who have sons (who change in the ladies' changing rooms) and fathers who have daughters (who have to change in the men's changing rooms) who are very uncomfortable with the current arrangement - 'family changing rooms' will prevent this problem.

Given this I'm surprised at Nicola Philippi's claim that most users who swim at Chelsea Sports Centre are appalled by our plans as she has no evidence to support it.

The new layout, which is used widely across the country, is designed to make better use of the space, something we need to do on a tight site like the Chelsea Sports Centre. It will also help reduce running costs.

The claim in your article that there will be fewer showers is plain wrong, in fact there will be more showers in the new changing areas.

BY SYED KAMALL

ONE of the wonderful things about being a MEP for the whole of London is the chance it gives me to meet and work with local community projects right across our great city. There must be thousands of small projects or charities helping people in local communities across all of London's boroughs.

These projects don't have the budgets of the larger international NGOs that might employ well-paid CEOs and press officers or send out hawkers onto your local high street to pressurise people into making regular donations.

Neither do they spend their money on campaigns calling for government to give them more money. Instead, they often work on much smaller budgets relying on volunteers to raise funds and to help those in need in their local communities.

While some may receive some funds from local or national government, their message is often one of helping local people to help themselves. Some have even told me that they don't necessarily need the state - they just need someone to give them a bit of help, a few pounds, some advice, equipment, some premises.

For example, the New Addington Jobs Club, near my office in Croydon, has helped to find jobs for over 100 local people after they felt that the local Job Centre had given up on them.

Regenerate on the Roehampton Estate is another inspiration. Andy Smith who founded the project realised that many ex-offenders and gang members were entrepreneurs, but were sadly operating outside the law.

He started the Feel Good Bakery to help those who used to sell drugs turn their skills to selling sandwiches. One of their slogans is 'From dope dealers to hope dealers'.

As this newspaper has reported fully, in Southall Dr Shamender Talwar and Anna Prior run the Unity of Faiths Foundation (TUFF) which uses the power of football (TUFF FC) to create a safe space for young people vulnerable to being recruited by gangs or terrorists.

Helping communities help themselves - Syed Kamall

At TUFF FC, I met a young lady who told me how she almost went to Syria after being recruited via Snapchat.

Dr Talwar made a few calls and gave her the choice of going through the gate of the airport to Syria, or the gates of the Stamford Bridge, since she was a Chelsea supporter.

When she arrived at the stadium she was so overcome that she knelt down to kiss the pitch, and now through her experience encourages others not to be recruited into terrorism. TUFF believes that one of the best ways to counter terrorism is to prevent people from becoming terrorists.

Politicians at all levels from all parties - who are at the heart of different networks - are so well-paced to help community enterprises like these and put people together. Whether it is funders, people with time, those with equipment or people with a building.

The New Addington jobs club needed second-hand computers to help more people search for jobs online, so I wrote an appeal letter to local papers. Regenerate asked me to introduce them to companies who might want to buy their sandwiches or use their catering services for corporate events. Using my role as the leader of the third largest of the eight political groups in the European Parliament, I have introduced TUFF to politicians across the UK and in other countries looking for ideas on how to tackle radicalisation. Tree Shepherd, a project in Lambeth that helps unemployed people start their own business have asked me to contact local businesses on their behalf.

Fortunately, politicians across the political spectrum are starting to re-embrace community-led solutions to tackling social breakdown and poverty.

My cooperative Socialist friends tell me that the political Left - in recent years - has placed too much emphasis on tackling poverty through trickle-down state solutions, whether from Brussels, Westminster, Whitehall or the local town hall, rather than recalling their proud history of how mutual societies and local projects used to help local people to help themselves.

Meanwhile, too many on the political Right talk about rolling back the state, but forget that while there are many civil society groups and community organisations that will engage if we give them the chance, many people are not the 'rational economic agents' we read about in economics text books and will need help, advice or support to start local projects.

Fortunately, there are now organisations such as the Bulldog Trust and the London Community Foundation that are looking to support local people running their own projects.

We can be proud of the thousands of small projects across London making a real difference in their local communities. So if you see a problem in your local community, why not volunteer to help a local project or set one up?

Alternatively, if you know of a local project that needs some help or advice, please get in touch via my website www.syedkamall.co.uk

Syed Kamall is the Conservative MEP for London. He was born and brought up in London and was elected to the European Parliament in 2005, and since 2013 has been Leader of the Conservatives there.

Can't ignore Crossrail facts

CLLR Coleridge's letter to you regarding Crossrail last week suggests he must be the originator of the saying "My mind is made up. Don't confuse me with the facts." Here once more are the facts, whether Cllr Coleridge likes them or not:

1. The Crossrail Growth Commission's report, just published, says "Growth is at the heart of the project. Crossrail 2 offers unrivalled potential to boost job growth and housing across the region."
2. The proposed King's Road Station is unique in having NO connectivity with other rail or tube lines.
3. The area around the station site has the second highest possible Public Transport Accessibility score, accorded by Transport for London themselves.
4. The numbers by which Cllr Coleridge is "not convinced" are factual, are unprecedented, and come from Transport for London's own consultation. These opponents are people who have listened to the arguments from the Council and who have also had to put up with regular personal insults in public from the Councillor himself.
5. Cllr Coleridge niggles about the wording of a petition which was set up long before TFL's public consultation. It would have been improper to change the wording after objectors had signed. The whole point is that the consultation came many months later but the opposition became even more overwhelming.
6. Social housing is NOT the same as "affordable" housing. There is a world of difference and the Councillor knows it full well. The identification of existing social housing estates as giving potential for Crossrail-related development came from the Council themselves.
7. TFL have clearly back-pedalled on the "No King's Road Closure" claim propagated by the Council. Cllr Coleridge's silence on this point speaks volumes.

Pokemon go home!

CANNY housemates are cashing in on the latest craze by advertising rooms and flats with easy access - to Pokemon Go locations.

Since the mobile game has taken Britain by storm cleverclogs landlords with rooms available have started including the distance between the front door and nearby Pokestops, locations where players gather supplies.

Online flatshare websites have become full of house-mates looking to fill a room mentioning how "passionate" they are about the game.

Dylan Ford is helping his housemates rent out his room when he returns home to New Zealand later this month and decided to include Pokestops in his ad to attract potential tenants.

In his ad, the 28-year-old said the Pokestops are just "30 seconds walk from the front door" of his home in Acton, west London.

He said: "We are targeting people in the age range that play Pokemon Go and it's very attractive to them to have Pokestops nearby."

"If they know they can play the game close to the house maybe they'll be more likely to rent the room out."

"We have a couple of Pokestops in the park nearby and we've had a few replies but nobody has mentioned the Pokemon thing, but it definitely seems to be working so far."

Dylan, who works in mar-

Finding the best Pokestops to rent

keting, added: "It was just a bit of fun really, I don't play the game but my flatmates do and they've tried to get me outside loads but I just don't see the point."

"I'm renting my room out because I'm moving back home to New Zealand after being in London for two years."

Another property featuring Pokemon in the description is a house in West Norwood, south London, which even includes the little sprites in every picture of the listing.

The ad, on Spareroom, for the £700-a-month room, to share a house with two female professionals, is named "Where to find the best Pokestop in London to rent."

A £900-a-month en suite double room in Canary Wharf also features the smash hit game in the description.

While other rooms in the block of flats are up for rent for around £800-a-month, the canny landlords whacked up the price after learning that renters would be able to collect their Pokemon goodies while lying in bed, because the flat is in range of a nearby Pokestop.

Living up to the wire

THOUSANDS of working families in London could not afford to pay their rent or mortgage for a month if they lost their job, new research reveals.

One in three families in England would run the risk of missing their payments if they suddenly found themselves unemployed, housing charity Shelter said.

It warned that thousands of London families were just "one paycheque away from losing their home".

Almost half of working families surveyed said high housing costs were their main area of concern when it comes to household budgets.

Tolkien auction

RARE first editions of The Hobbit and all three Lord of the Rings books are up for auction - for just £3,000. The 1937 copy of JRR Tolkien's first novel was among the first 1,500 printed, and is going under the hammer with a £1,000-£1,500 guide price due to a lost dust jacket. It comes from a private collection, and is being auctioned alongside first editions of the three Lord of the Rings books by London's Chiswick Auctions. The trio of green bound books - among around 500 first editions of ever printed - were written between 1954 and 1955. They have an estimate of £2,000-£3,000 when they go up for auction on September 6.

Humanitarian hero is honoured

BY JACK DIXON

jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

AN inspirational west Londoner who dedicated her life to helping people in some of the world's most impoverished countries has been honoured as a global 'change maker' for her outstanding work overseas.

Samra Said was recognised at the Southbank Centre's Festival of Love after being named among 40 of the world's most influential humanitarian campaigners.

The 34-year-old said she was "humbled" to receive the award, which was inspired by the late Nelson Mandela's 67-year struggle for equality in South Africa.

Ms Said, who is the UK programmes coordinator for humanitarian charity Human Appeal, has been involved in several groundbreaking campaigns designed to improve the lives of the world's poorest people.

She compiled a booklet of her own poetry to raise money for communities in Senegal where access to clean water is scarce and organised a masquerade ball to drum up cash for children living in squalid conditions on the streets of the West African country.

If that wasn't enough, Ms Said also pushed her body to the limit by running five kilometres in the blistering heat of Kuwait to raise awareness about drought in Somaliland.

Her astonishing fundraising efforts have generated more than £50,000 in the last year alone.

"It is so humbling to be recognised for projects that I am very much passionate about," she said.

"The award made me reflect on my humanitarian travel with Human Appeal. Having seen how water in some rural areas is scarce and the growing number of children living rough on the streets of Dakar, I was determined to fundraise and raise awareness.

"Knowing full well that one step, one action can change and make a positive impact on those in dire needs made me determined to do what it takes to save lives in Somaliland, Senegal and elsewhere."

Her valiant humanitarian efforts don't merely extend overseas, however. In her role at Human Appeal, Ms Said has also handed out food and clothing to homeless people in the UK, renovated the homes of people hit by the Cumbrian floods last Christmas and visited hospitals to give presents to children seeking mental health treatment.

Othman Moqbel, chief executive of Human Appeal, paid special tribute to Ms Said following the festival.

"Samra's achievements are unmissable and well-deserved. She spends every waking minute helping other people," he said.

"She is an inspiration to everyone she works with, everyone she meets - and to me personally.

"Nobody better embodies the Human Appeal spirit of working tirelessly to make this world a better place for everyone. We are incredibly proud that she has finally been recognised for her unbeatable humanitarian ethic."

Calls to bring back standing on the terraces at football matches

MORE than £500 could be slashed from the price of a Premier League season ticket at some of London's biggest football clubs - if fans were allowed to stand.

A sports think tank suggested that top-flight teams including Arsenal, Chelsea and Crystal Palace could offer cheaper tickets if the rules banning standing at grounds were lifted.

Supporters could expect to make savings of more than £500 at Arsenal's Emirates Stadium, while Chelsea fans could cut £438 off their fee, according to the Adam Smith Institute.

The author of the report, Ben Southwood, called on sports minister Tracey Crouch to repeal the ban after the Hillsborough inquiry found that the tragedy in 1989 was caused by police incompetence and not standing terraces.

He said: "Unlike the adversarial attitude police, club organisation and fans had during the dark days of the 1980s, we now know how to manage large crowds well. The ban does not fit."

Mr Southwood said the cheapest tickets could fall by up to 57 per cent if clubs were able to increase capacity and widen the choice on offer.

This would leave fewer fans missing out on the big games and improve access to lower income supporters, he said.

Mr Southwood added: "Everyone wants it to happen - fans overwhelmingly. At least some people in government are in favour of this liberalisation as well.

"It would widen the gap between the cheapest and most expensive tickets, which is what has happened in Europe where prices are lower anyway.

"We are not going back to vast open spaces of terracing like in the old days. It would look very different and the areas would be pretty small - accommodating between 1,000 to 5,000 fans at most."

Experts believe Chelsea fans could save more than £400 on a season ticket at Stamford Bridge if rules on standing terraces were relaxed

Babs is chosen to be the welcoming face of London

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

MAYOR Sadiq Khan has picked EastEnders' Barbara Windsor as the Londoner best suited to welcome foreign visitors to the city.

Dame Barbara has been chosen to lead Team London's 550 "Ambassadors" who are out and about in the capital greeting visitors from around the world and providing them with information and local knowledge.

Throughout the summer the Team London Ambassadors, recognisable in their distinctive magenta uniforms, are providing maps, information and local knowledge from purpose-built 'welcome pods' stationed in a number of key tourist hotspots including Southbank, Trafalgar Square, Piccadilly Circus, Parliament Square, Exhibition Road, St James's Park, Tower of London, Gatwick North and Gatwick South. Over the summer they will volunteer 15,000 hours over 4,000 shifts, helping more than 250,000 visitors.

Dame Barbara joined the Ambassadors in Trafalgar Square to help spread the Mayor's message that London is "open for all". The former Carry On actress has been an enthusiastic supporter of Team London since the Visitor Welcome programme launched ahead of the London 2012 Games.

London attracted a record number of tourists in 2015 with 31.5 million people visiting the capital, a 20 per cent increase on five years ago. 18.6 million were international, compared to 17.4 million in 2014.

"As the 2016 Olympic and Paralympic Games run in Rio de Janeiro, Team London Ambassadors, 60 per cent of whom began volunteering in the London 2012 Games, are continuing the London Olympic Legacy and volunteering their time to provide a warm welcome to visitors as part of the Mayor's Visitor Welcome programme," said the Mayor's spokesman.

Team London is supporting the Mayor's #LondonIsOpen campaign, launched in the wake of the EU Referendum to show the world that London is united and open for business, and people of all backgrounds and nationalities are welcome.

The Ambassadors come from a wide range of backgrounds, reflecting the diverse nature of London's population, and speak over 50 languages between them including Cantonese, Chinese, Hindi, Italian, Punjabi, French, German, Spanish and British Sign Language. Those who speak a second language wear a badge, making it easier for tourists to seek help in their native tongue.

Dame Barbara said: "I am thrilled to join the Team London Ambassadors. As the 2016 Olympic and Paralympic Games happen in Rio de Janeiro, it's fantastic to see how strong our own Games legacy is here in London, with many of our volunteers beginning their journey back in 2012.

"Our Team London Ambassadors hail from countries around the world and are doing a brilliant job of showing London is truly open to visitors from all corners of the globe.

"Team London is a wonderful initiative, getting Londoners out there volunteering for our city, giving tips and advice to visitors and making sure London remains the greatest destination in the world."

Mayor Khan said: "As excitement builds for the Olympic and Paralympic Games, I am pleased that our Team London Ambassadors are back out on the streets again this summer, showing that London is open and ready to welcome visitors from all corners of the world.

"Volunteering is a great way to break down barriers and encourage people to build connections with their fellow Londoners. The Team London Ambassadors programme is testament to this and I want to take this opportunity to thank all of the volunteers and Team Leaders for their hard work and contribution in making London the world's best place to live, work and visit"

Due to the success of the initiative, Team London has been asked to deliver the volunteering programme for the London 2017 Summer of Athletics, which includes the IPC ParaAthletics World Championships and the IAAF World Championships. Team Leader Francette Albin, who spent the morning working with Dame Barbara in Trafalgar Square said: "My team comes from all corners of the capital and they're always enthusiastic to share our love of this city. We're here to show the world that London is open to everyone and I look forward to welcoming many more people to the capital this Summer."

Adeniyi Tella, a new Team London Ambassador added: "In my day job, I work for Great Western Railways at Paddington Station, and when I was given the opportunity to become a Team London Ambassador this year, I leapt at the chance. There's nothing I don't know about how to navigate round London, I love sharing this insider knowledge with visitors and locals alike."

Same views on Brexit

THE majority of Londoners who voted in the European Union referendum in June would vote the same way if it was held again this week, according to new research.

More than 92 per cent of people polled said they would not change their minds in the wake of the Brexit result.

The survey found that, of those who would swap, more would sway from Remain to Leave than Leave to Remain according to the poll by KIS Finance.

Landmark anniversary

A NEW exhibition in London will mark the 150th anniversary of the first communications cable laid across the Atlantic Ocean, connecting Europe and America.

The City of London Corporation's Guildhall Art Gallery has teamed up with King's College London, the Courtauld Institute of Art and the Institute of Making at University College London to celebrate the landmark infrastructure scheme.

Experts say cable telegraphy transformed our understanding of time, space and the speed of communication. Paintings from the Corporation's art gallery will be on display during the exhibition, as well as rare artefacts, including code books and communication devices.

Singer songwriter Anita changes direction with an 'ology' in cats

BY CHRIS DYER

A MOBO winning singer songwriter has become the country's first cat graduate - with an ology in feline behaviour.

Anita Kelsey turned her love of the four-legged pets into a career after getting a first class degree in cat psychology.

The 52-year-old has worked as a backing singer on songs by Razorlight, Boy George, Spice Girls and Kings of Leon and won a MOBO in 2001 for her album as part of UK Garage band Sunship.

She also performed on trance tracks popular in Agia Napa with her vocals in many films, including Dark City, starring Jennifer Connelly.

Anita Kelsey has obtained a degree in cat psychology to help in her animal behaviour practice

But Anita decided on a career change after the suicide of a close friend in 2009 and opened her cat behaviour practice in Notting Hill, west London.

Four years later she became an undergraduate at Middlesex University so she could help troubled cats.

Anita, who has two Norwegian Forest cats herself, both seven, called Kiki and Zaza, said: "Lots of people work in animal behaviour but I think I'm the first person to complete a work-based degree based on my practice."

"I wanted to be taken more seriously by vets as I get a lot of referrals from them and think this gives me that footing."

For Anita's degree research she looked at aggression in cats during grooming and how it can be reduced.

Anita added: "I wanted to try and understand how owners can move forward and see why cats are being aggressive."

"Sometimes it's using the wrong tools, sometimes it's a case of understanding how cats view grooming and how it affects them."

"My ultimate goal is to run a successful behaviour practice."

"When I was younger I wanted to either work with music or cats and I've been lucky enough to do both."

"It's my dream job to work with cats all day."

Her job mainly involves grooming difficult cats while assessing their behaviour to find out how best to get them in a better mood.

Anita worked as a singer songwriter for 25 years before the suicide of her friend caused her to turn her back on the industry.

She added: "I fell into a kind of depression and didn't want to write anymore or go into the studio so I felt a change was needed."

"Music is very emotional so I needed a complete break from it, the music industry is very hard, very cut-throat, and I just wanted to get away from that energy."

"And cats are a great kind of therapy, working with them every day has been a great help."

Zuma the tortoise is saved from being fried

A 90-year-old tortoise was narrowly saved from incineration after being rescued from a garden waste bag - by a thermal imaging camera.

Westminster City Council staff rummaged through 1,000 rubbish bags to track down the pet after its owner alerted them to its plight.

Using thermal imaging software and GPS tracking, 90-year-old tortoise Zuma was hunted down on his way to a waste plant and rescued after a two-and-a-half hour search through 10 tonnes of garden refuse.

Owner Sarah Joiner, 56, had called the council after realising what had happened and praised them for their work finding her pet, which she has owned for 40 years.

Zuma had crawled into a bag which, along with 1,000 others, was on its way to the South East London Combined Heat and Power facility.

Mrs Joiner, from central London, said: "Thank you is never going to be enough. It was amazing teamwork. There was no nonsense about it, just enormous good will in finding him."

"I can't thank Jarno Stet from the council, Lynn Davis from Veolia, plus Ben and Simon from SELCHP enough."

During the hunt, a thermal imaging camera was used and incredibly Zuma was found safe and well.

Lynn Davis, Contract Manager for District Heating at Veolia, said: "I'm delighted that we were able to find Zuma and return him to Mrs Joiner unharmed - he really has survived against the odds."

"The team at SELCHP were all keen to help when they heard what had happened and together we were able to ensure that the search was conducted safely and effectively."

"This was certainly a different way to spend a Friday afternoon and I am just relieved we were successful."

Sarah Joiner is reunited with 90-year-old tortoise Zuma who was found moments before he reached South East London Combined Heat and Power facility

Diplomacy is key during the Princess Royal's visit to Russia

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

WHEN the Princess Royal visits Russia later this month for the commemorations for the 75th anniversary of the first Arctic Convoys, the diplomatic ties planned for the occasion possibly won't be helped by mentioning her father's feelings.

The Duke of Edinburgh is a direct descendant of the former Russian royal family, who were murdered in a grisly way by Bolsheviks during the Russian Revolution and the plain-speaking duke is famous for comment on the killings.

When asked in 1967 if he would like to visit the Soviet Union, the Duke replied: "I would like to go to Russia very much, although the bastards murdered half my family."

Empress Alix and Grand Duchess Elizabeth of Russia were the Duke's great aunts, sisters of his grandmother.

Empress Alix was executed with the rest of her immediate family, shot in the head by Russian revolutionaries acting on the orders of Lenin. Her sister Elizabeth suffered an even more horrible death.

Empress Alix, left, and Grand Duchess Elizabeth of Russia who were both murdered

In July 1918 she and other members of the imperial Russian family were driven in carts to an abandoned iron mine with a pit 20 metres deep. Lenin's secret police the Cheka beat all their prisoners before throwing their victims into this pit, Elisabeth being the first. Hand grenades were then hurled down the shaft, but only one victim died as a result of the grenades.

According to the personal account of one of the killers, Elisabeth and the others survived the initial fall into the mine, prompting the Cheka to toss in a grenade after them. Following the explosion, he claimed to have heard Elisabeth and the others singing an Orthodox hymn from the bottom of the shaft. When the singing continued after a second grenade was thrown in, a large quantity of brushwood was shoved into the opening and set alight.

Doubtless this memory will not be on the official agenda when the a key role a part in supplying Leningrad – the present day St Petersburg – during the siege.

The cost to life was huge. Between August 1941 and May 1945, around 1,400 merchant vessels escorted by ships of the Royal Navy, Royal Canadian Navy and US Navy made the journey. Some 85 merchant vessels and 16 Royal Navy ships were lost during the convoys and more than 3,000 British merchant seamen, Servicemen and their allies died.

To this day the UK and Russia continue to honour the sacrifice of Royal Navy sailors and merchant seamen, including through the UK's Arctic Star medal. Arctic Convoy veterans and The Band of HM Royal Marines will also participate in the commemorations.

Princess Royal represents The Queen at the ceremonies in Arkhangelsk, north west Russia, on August 30 to mark the anniversary of the Arctic Convoys with which Britain assisted Russia during World War Two.

The convoy route, described by Winston Churchill as "the worst journey in the world" was the most dangerous of the war. The convoys ran the blockade by the German Navy, avoiding mines and U-boats to the supply the Soviet Union, playing

SOW THE SEEDS OF LOVE

Sophie gets on her bike

SUPER-cyclist Sophie Countess of Wessex is spending her summer holidays from royal duties getting hot in the saddle as she strains through riding 60 hours a day in preparation for a long hard slog.

The Countess is currently in training for a 445-mile trek as part of the Edinburgh to London Diamond Challenge on behalf of the Duke of Edinburgh Award, to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the DoE's founding by The Duke of Edinburgh.

The long-term supporter of the DoE Award, is set to cycle from the Palace of Holyroodhouse to Buckingham Palace, setting off from Edinburgh on September 19 and arriving in London on September 25.

The biking challenge aims to raise money for the Duke of Edinburgh Award Diamond Appeal and Buckingham Palace is asking the public to sponsor the royal rider. Funds will go towards supporting disadvantaged and disabled young people to take part in the Duke of Edinburgh Award.

"I think if you'd told me a few months ago that I would be able to cycle 60 miles in one go I would have laughed, but here I am doing 60 miles a day," said Sophie in a promo video issued by Buckingham Palace.

"It's been hard and there have definitely been moments when I have wondered what on earth I have decided to do."

She will be riding with a team of cyclists from four of the regiments of which she is the royal chief, the 5th Battalion The Rifles; RAF Wittering; Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps and Corps of Army Music.

"They are all experienced cyclists, I am not, they know what they're doing, I don't," she said.

"They know how to get me from one point to the next, they're providing a lot of chat to distract me, and a lot of encouragement up the hills."

"They're really just there to get me from A to B and they've been incredible and huge enthusiasts and, to be honest with you, I could not be doing this now if it wasn't for them."

Museum could benefit from the George effect

THE next beneficiary of the Prince George Effect (PGE) is expected to be the Natural History Museum, as apparently he and his Mum are regular visitors.

The PGE, the copycat factor that influences other young parents to buy whatever the infant heir to the throne is wearing, is now tipped to boost visitor numbers to the landmark museum on the Cromwell Road.

At the recent function at the museum, where the Duchess of Cambridge met with representatives of various museums who have been entered to win £100,000 from the Art Fund, she told Nicky Wilson from West Lothian's Jupiter Artland about their regular trips to the landmark.

"The Duchess said Prince George comes here a lot. We were talking about children interacting with sculpture and contemporary art and he loves doing that, and apparently he also loves 3D three-dimensional sculptures," said Nicky.

Singles have more fun!

BY MARK WAGHORN

IF you're feeling left on the shelf then don't be downhearted - single people really do have richer social lives just like Prince Harry, according to new research.

The world's most eligible bachelor is renowned for loving a good time - while his married older sibling has a reputation for being rather dull.

Now psychologists have revealed that being a bachelor, or spinster, can be a much more fulfilling existence both at home and at work - boosting "psychological growth and development".

They say the dating shows and apps that strive to make sure none of us end up on the shelf may be barking up the wrong tree.

Singletons now outnumber married individuals in both the UK and the US for the first time since records began.

And Dr Bella DePaulo, of the University of California, Santa Barbara, said, far from feeling lonely, many embrace their freedom.

She told an American Psychological Association meeting in Denver: "The preoccupation with the perils of loneliness can obscure the profound benefits of solitude."

"It is time for a more accurate portrayal of single people and single life - one that recognises the real strengths and resilience of people who are single, and what makes their lives so meaningful."

She cited long term studies that have shown they value meaningful work more than their hitched counterparts. They are also more connected to parents, siblings, friends, neighbours and colleagues.

Dr DePaulo explained: "When people marry, they become more insular."

But she said research is lacking because of the 814 papers she found, most just used them as a comparison group to learn more about marriage.

Those that did focus on single people revealed some telling findings. For example, they have a heightened sense of self determination and they are more likely to experience "a sense of continued growth and development as a person."

Another study of lifelong single people showed self sufficiency serves them well. The more self sufficient they were, the less likely they were to experience negative emotions. For married people, the opposite was true, according to Dr DePaulo.

There are more unmarried people than ever before in the United States, according to the Bureau of Labour Statistics.

In 2014, there were 124.6 million unmarried Americans over age 16, meaning 50.2 percent of the nation's adult population identified as single, according to BLS. In contrast, only 37.4 percent of the population was unmarried in 1976.

Latest figures from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) shows 51% of people in England and Wales are single - meaning they have overtaken those who are married for the first time.

It is understood the proportion of single and married people varies little across all four UK countries.

Dr DePaulo said married people in the States should be doing a lot better than single people in view of the number of laws that benefit them. But in many ways, they aren't.

She said: "People who marry get access to more than 1,000 federal benefits and protections, many of them financial."

"Considering all of the financial and cultural advantages people get just because they are married, it becomes even more striking that single people are doing as well as they are."

Despite the advantages of staying single, Dr DePaulo doesn't claim one status is better than the other.

She added: "More than ever before, Americans can pursue the ways of living that work best for them. There is no one blueprint for the good life."

"What matters is not what everyone else is doing or what other people think we should be doing, but whether we can find the places, the spaces and the people that fit who we really are and allow us to live our best lives."

Taking a look inside Prince Charles' place

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

VISITORS who want a poke around Prince Charles' place to see his personal paintings now have their chance as Clarence House is open to the public for this month only.

Hour-long tours of the luxury home will take visitors through several rooms including the Lancaster Room, the Library, the Dining Room, the Garden Room, where the Prince of Wales officially receives his guests, and the Morning Room, a drawing room that got its name from the light that illuminates the room early in the day and which is said to be the Duchess of Cornwall's favourite room.

Tickets for the tour cost just £10 per person. For an extra £25 you can upgrade to the exclusive afternoon tour which gives visitors additional access to the Cornwall Room, the home of 22 watercolours painted by Prince Charles, and a complimentary glass of Champagne.

Tickets can be reserved at royalcollection.org.uk and the money from the ticket sales will go to the Royal Collection Trust charity which pays for maintenance and repairs on royal residences.

Clarence House was built between 1825 and 1827 to the designs of John Nash as the new London home of George III's third son, Prince William Henry, Duke of Clarence and his wife Adelaide. The house incorporated the south-western corner of the Tudor buildings of St James's Palace.

The house created by Nash was a bright, stuccoed mansion of classical proportions. Facing west on to Stable Yard Road, it had three storeys above a basement and a hipped slate roof. There was a double portico at the centre of the new west front, leading to the entrance hall (now the Library), which in turn connected with a long corridor or gallery running the whole width of the house. To either side of the entrance hall, Nash created a Breakfast Room (now the Morning Room) and Dining Room, with three principal reception rooms directly above on the first floor.

The interior of Clarence House was plain in comparison to Nash's designs for Buckingham Palace. Ornamental plasterwork was confined to the reception rooms on the first floor, which were hung with crimson damask.

Nash made numerous alterations to his original plan as work proceeded, and the final cost of £22,232 (£2,120,000 at today's prices) was more than double what he had originally estimated.

Clarence House was designed by John Nash. Below the Morning Room and the Library

Clarence House became the London home of Princess Elizabeth and The Duke of Edinburgh, following their marriage in 1947, when the Victorian interiors were given a fresh new appearance.

Post-war restrictions on building and materials meant that there was still an overall simplicity to the furnishings and much of the furniture came in the form of the couple's wedding presents. In the Dining Room, for instance, the Georgian dining table and 20 ladder-back chairs were the gift of the Royal Warrant Holders Association, while the mahogany sideboard and four side tables were a present from Queen Mary.

With Princess Elizabeth's accession as Queen, the royal couple moved to Buckingham Palace and Clarence House was prepared for the accommodation of Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother, who moved in with Princess Margaret shortly before the Coronation in 1953.

The Queen Mother created the Morning Room in the space that had been The Duke of Edinburgh's study, installing a Georgian marble chimneypiece and a new plaster ceiling with her own crown. In 1960, she opened out two of the rooms on the ground floor to form the Garden Room.

The rooms of Clarence House were furnished and hung with works of art acquired by The Queen Mother over her 60-year career as a collector and patron of artists.

The collection was particularly strong in 20th-century British art, embracing important works by John Piper, Graham Sutherland, WS Sickert and Augustus John. She also purchased superb examples of Fabergé, English porcelain and silver, particularly pieces relating to the Bowes-Lyon family.

The Queen Mother greatly enjoyed hosting luncheons and evening receptions at Clarence House. All foreign Heads of State called there for tea in the afternoon of the first day of a State Visit.

O2 Academy, Brixton
Thursday August 18

Dance music giants Faithless return to raise the roof off the Brixton Academy with a stellar set bursting with huge hits. Most famous for legendary club anthem 'Insomnia', the London trio Maxi Jazz, Sister Bliss and Rollo have also earned a reputation for their strong political messages ('Mass Destruction'; 'We Come 1').

VISUAL imagery has always played a prominent part in Alison Goldfrapp's music. Known for her outlandish costumes and theatrical performance style, the singer has never been afraid to make a spectacle of herself.

A string of memorable photo shoots have depicted the 50-year-old in skimpy silk gowns, tinselly bric-a-brac garments and on one occasion full pirate attire.

But now Goldfrapp is reversing the roles to go behind the camera for the first time.

Indulging her appetite for the power of pictures, the singer put fellow stars Laura Mvula and Jack Savoretti in the spotlight for a special shoot ahead of their performances at Somerset House this summer.

In a series of snaps entitled Anticipation, Goldfrapp set out to capture the artists' bubbling excitement in the run-up to show time – culminating in the "rush of energy and elation" experienced at the height of a perfect performance.

The shoot was commissioned by American Express, the headline

Loving the imagery - Alison Goldfrapp sponsor for Somerset House's Summer Series, which welcomed the likes of Benjamin Clementine, James Morrison and Courtney Barnett in June.

Goldfrapp, who performed at the same venue three years ago, says the project enabled her to recapture that unique exhilaration that artists experience moments before taking to the stage.

"Photography has become a real passion for me so when American Express invited me to do this I jumped at the chance," she said.

"I can vividly recall the moments that made my performance at the Summer Series so memorable: from the anticipation before going on stage to the energy of the crowd, and the sense of sheer elation as the audience were captivated by the music."

Goldfrapp shadowed soul singer Mvula ahead of her Summer Series performance on July 10, documenting her journey from the dressing room to the final encore.

She then snapped Anglo-Italian guitarist Savoretti five days later to offer a unique view of the backstage build-up.

In her first commercial photographic commission, Goldfrapp swapped the microphone for a digital 'powershot' camera.

The images capture Mvula and Savoretti in the iconic surrounds of Somerset House – from the intimate antechambers to the majestic courtyard that became their stage.

Goldfrapp added: "As artists, Laura's vibrancy and intensity, contrasted with Jack's laid-back vibe, made them fascinating subjects to shoot against the stunning backdrop of Somerset House."

The project has proved an exciting new venture for the singer, who has spent over a decade as the driving force behind the electro-pop duo that bears her name.

Famous for huge chart hits including Ooh La La and Number 1, Goldfrapp has carved out an enviable career as one of the pioneers of the glam resurgence.

Born in north London, she formed the double act with synth whizz Will Gregory in her early thirties and the duo went on to win a Grammy Award nomination for their acclaimed third album Supernature.

But despite turning 50 this year, the singer's latest creative adventure suggests she is certainly not slowing down.

Charlotte Nimmo, head of live events at Somerset House, said: "Alison gave an incredible performance on the Summer Series stage in 2013 and it's great to have her back at Somerset House to capture two of this year's headline acts before they take to our courtyard stage."

THE glamour of the 'Golden Twenties' is on its way to London as part of a unique celebration of the Prohibition era.

Hipsters will be dancing the Charleston at a top secret venue next month as the capital enjoys a taste of the era's famous opulence.

Harking back to a time when pleasure-seeking and decadence were the watchwords of the day, the Prohibition Party is being billed as the most hedonistic event of the year.

Expect fast cars and loose morals, short bobs and even shorter hemlines – London is going back in time.

"Prohibition sweeps guests away to the giddy magic and romance of the glistening Twenties, a time when foot-loose flappers danced the Charleston, card sharp cads tried their luck at the roulette table, and everyone quaffed elegantly on the free-flowing bootlegged booze," said an insider behind the top secret event.

"Prohibition is a mesmeric foray into a bygone era in which sensational glamour and wanton waywardness were the order of the day."

DJs will be trading in the superclubs for the gramophones, with silent cinema, dancing troupes and gambling tables thrown in for good measure.

Guests will also have to peer inside the pages of books to find the cocktail menus in a bid to evade the beady eyes of the law.

In an age of soaring stocks and bootleg barons, the famous parties of the era cultivated an unparalleled atmosphere of opulence and exuberance. Now Londoners will be given a taste of the high life.

The Prohibition Party takes place on Saturday September 17 at an as yet unannounced London venue. For more information visit www.prohibition1920s.com

No sex please, we're miserable

WE are understandably deeply concerned over how Andrew Davies is going to please his BBC masters with his new TV adaptation of Les Misérables, as there is very little sex in Victor Hugo's original book.

Davies, who hugely boosted the ratings of the recent War and Peace epic by adding a number of sex scenes, has been tasked with giving Hugo's 19th century classic a modern look that will appeal to the sort of viewer who is unlikely to wade through the 1,500-pages of its English translation.

Our literary editor, who acclaims Les Misérables as "one of the six greatest novels of the world" says that it is no Fanny Hill and aside from the bit where Fantine turns to prostitution after pulling out her hair and two of her front teeth – rarely a good look – the book rises above all of that smutty stuff that so delights the audience of today.

Oo-err, without all of that sweaty stuff which has helped to make triumphs of Versailles, The Night Manager, Poldark and War and Peace, how will the famed and much-regarded Davies manage?

Surely he will not resort to a touch of amplification, so loved by us hacks, as he did with the Tolstoy adaptation, which surprised some viewers with racy scenes that did not appear to be in the original novel?

When challenged by the BBC's Kirsty Lang that he had "put a bit more sex in it", Davies nimbly replied that it was "all in there" if readers could look beyond the lines. "Tolstoy just didn't actually write the scenes and I couldn't see why. So I thought I would," he said.

An excellent device and we look forward to the scenes that Hugo forgot to write about Valjean meeting Chesty Morgan in a pole-dancing club.

Victor Hugo - Would he approve?

Anna Richardson presents Naked on Channel 4. Has it gone too far?

TELEVISION'S cheapest-ever peep show, Channel 4's ludicrously-obvious ratings bid Naked Attraction, could bring a bonus of up to £1 billion for the BBC.

Naked Attraction, C4's appalling endorsement of voyeurism, is rumoured to have finally tilted the balance in Whitehall for Channel 4 to be privatised and there's talk of proceeds of the sell-off to be used by the Government to help fund the other public broadcaster, the one that doesn't instigate infantile stunts in order to attract an audience of peeping toms.

The word in Whitehall is that one option now facing the Department of Culture is to sell C4 in order to provide funding for top quality BBC programming that could be sold profitably around the world.

The debate on whether to privatise Channel 4 has raged since Margaret Thatcher was at No 10 and many Governments since have agonised on whether to get shot of it.

But now that C4 has plumbed to concocting a game show the only point of which is to encourage peering over close-ups of contestants' genitals, powerful voices are asking "is this what we want from a public-service broadcaster that has our name on it?"

We hear that Naked Attraction, and the uproar surrounding the scheduling scam that it is clearly nothing more than a 21st century version of a one penny pier peep machine, has influenced the new Culture Minister Karen Bradley and Prime Minister Theresa May to now seriously consider a sale.

With recent revenues being around £940 million, C4 is said to be an attractive option as the British Gas equivalent of Mrs May's

Government and analysts believe £1 billion could be made from privatisation.

Although the Treasury is likely to want to use any such windfall for other budgets, one suggestion is that a large chunk, if not all of it, could be invested in "a Beeb pot", a fund that the BBC could go to in order to produce, with Government approval, quality productions like House Of Cards which make a fortune for US-based Netflix, and lessen the burden on the license fee payer.

The advantage of this new thinking for the Government is that, by controlling the fund and for what productions it is eked out, it would then have some say in the sort of TV that the BBC produces.

The new PM is thought to favour seeing the BBC return to raising the game and leading the world pack in TV drama, documentaries and comedy. Naked Attraction and its cheap, tawdry like is thought not to feature as an example of her drive to reinstate Great British entertainment values.

"At a time when it is clearly in the BBC's interest not to upset the Government, the wise might want to take into consideration the sort of programmes that the new PM likes," said one TV analyst.

"Like the other Iron Lady of Number 10, Theresa May is a big fan of Yes Minister. It might be an idea for the bosses at the BBC to start thinking about bringing that back.

WHILST the Academy Awards is controversially slacking at representing black, Asian and minority ethnic actors and film-makers at the Oscars, ITV is aiming to right the balance.

A long overdue new awards ceremony celebrating BAME icons in public life is to be broadcast on ITV. The BEAM Awards are to celebrate the achievements of influential public figures from BAME backgrounds, to be presented at a glittering ceremony on October 12th.

"The awards will highlight BAME talent that is currently underrepresented within celebrity, media, journalism, arts, sports and politics," said an ITV spokesman.

"The nominations are now open for talented stars who have excelled in these areas and have inspired and encouraged the next generation."

The London Palladium is set to host the prestigious black tie event, which will be hosted by Alesha Dixon and Sir Trevor McDonald.

Sir Trevor said: "I am delighted to be a part of these awards. They will play an important part in our society, and I have no doubt that they will continue to flourish."

Britain's Got Talent judge added: "I am proud to host the BEAM awards, as I think it's a great opportunity to highlight the successes of BAME people from a variety of industries."

Nominations have opened and the public has the chance to submit nominations up until September 4th, by visiting www.beamawards.com/nominate in the categories: Actor of the Year (Male), Actor of the Year (Female), TV Personality of the Year (Male), TV Personality of the Year (Female), Sports Personality of the Year (Male), Sports Personality of the Year (Female), Comedy Act of the Year, Cultural Icon, Politician of the Year, Entrepreneur of the Year, Inspiration of the Year, International Icon of the Year, Music Artist or Band Award, Diverse Company Award.

BEAM Awards founder Paul Sesay said: "If ever there was a time to celebrate and elevate the truly staggering diverse talent the UK has to offer, it is now."

"The BEAM Awards aims to bring communities together and highlight the phenomenal achievements of BAME icons nationwide. We have a fundamental passion to drive change and make a lasting and sustainable difference across the media industry and beyond."

David Bowie

Bowie's final work on London stage

DAVID Bowie's final work, entitled Lazarus, will make the King's Cross Theatre its 'ground control' later this year in a London premiere.

The musical, which opened in New York in November 2015, is inspired by the book, The Man Who Fell To Earth and focuses on Thomas Newton, as he remains still on Earth – a 'man' unable to die, his head soaked in cheap gin and haunted by a past love.

The Walter Tevis novel was first adapted into a film starring Bowie in 1976 and the stage version was completed by the legendary rock star, alongside co-writer Edna Walsh, just prior to his death from cancer at the age of 69 in January 2016.

The New York production became a focal point for fans, following the news of the singer's untimely demise, with some of his devotees creating an impromptu shrine at the theatre in his honour.

The New York run of Lazarus sold out in record time and the limited season at one of London's newest theatres, is expected to be just as popular, as it features three unreleased Bowie tracks.

Reprising their roles from the original New York production are US TV star Michael C Hall (Dexter, Six Feet Under), Michael Esper (Last Ship, American Idol) and teenage sensation, Sophia Anne Caruso, with full casting to be announced at a later date.

Lazarus will run at the King's Cross Theatre from October 25 until January 22. For more information, visit the website lazarusmusical.com

The Bodyguard *****

SOUL superstar, Beverley Knight returned to the London stage and a full standing ovation from a capacity crowd at the Dominion Theatre for the gala opening night of The Bodyguard, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The singer is reprising the role of Rachel Marron in the stage musical adaptation, which is based on the 1992 film of the same name featuring the music of the late Whitney Houston.

Watched by a plethora of celebrities including Bond Girl Naomie Harris, Towie's Lewis Bloor and former Strictly Come Dancing star Robin Windsor, the 'Queen of the Night' proved just why she is in such high demand, as both a stage performer and recording artist, with a vocal performance of such a high calibre that many who witnessed it were moved to tears.

From the opening bars of the first show-stopping number (accompanied by high energy choreography and blazing stage effects), to the utterly compelling finale of I Will Always Love You, Knight put in a truly astonishing performance.

The jukebox musical has been dragged up-to-date since its previous outing in the West End and follows a global superstar (Knight) who, while in pursuit of an Academy Award, finds herself under threat from a deranged fan.

A specialist bodyguard (Ben Richards) is drafted in to protect the family from the menace and, after an initially frosty reception, becomes a loved member of the household.

Knight is joined by Ben Richards who brings a charm to the stony faced, uptight bodyguard and effortlessly portrays the struggle between maintaining a work ethic and his admiration for his employer. The chemistry with Knight is simply electric. A scene during which they discover their love for one another in a karaoke bar is both funny and heart warming.

Rachel Johns, as Knight's sister Nicki, proves her powerhouse vocals can match those of her on-stage sibling and with a much more sensitive characterisation, than in previous productions, their duet Run to You is an utter joy.

The chilling story has been modified slightly but continues to pack a punch focusing on the rise of celebrity culture and the public obsession with idols.

With classic 90s songs performed in a contemporary setting, the updated version does, at times, feel a little bit cheesy especially during a bizarre film montage highlighting the couple's relationship but the performances are so strong that any minor misgivings are quickly forgiven.

And it's the performance by Beverley Knight, which many will be going to see, with her simply stunning vocals worth the ticket price alone.

The Bodyguard continues at the Dominion Theatre, visit the www.thebodyguardmusical.com/london

The cast of Mandela Trilogy

A fascinating musical tribute to the life of Nelson Mandela is set to be presented at the Royal Festival Hall later this month, as part of a nationwide tour.

Mandela Trilogy, written and directed by Michael Williams with music by Peter Louis van Dijk and Mike Campbell, had its European premiere at Wales Millennium Centre in 2012.

Told in three parts by a cast and orchestra of more than 60 South African performers, the music matches the vastly different phases of Mandela's journey from freedom fighter to president.

The upbeat jazz and swing-influenced songs of Sophiatown are framed by musical styles more familiar in contemporary opera – with a dash of Xhosa folk music that grounds the production in its African roots.

From tribal initiation rites on the banks of the Mbashe River, through the heady and rebellious jazz-fuelled days in Sophiatown, to incarceration and reflection on Robben Island and finally beyond to freedom – this is the story of one of the world's most iconic figures.

The amazing life of Nelson Mandela is brought vividly to the stage by Cape Town Opera in a large-scale celebration and tribute to the man who touched hearts and minds around the world.

Written by two different composers, each act is in stark contrast to the others, but with an over-arching dramatic theme that shines a light on the life of an extraordinary man.

Graeme Farrow, artistic and creative director at Wales Millennium Centre said: "Following its debut performances and fantastic reception at Wales Millennium Centre in 2012, we are delighted to be presenting Cape Town Opera's Mandela Trilogy on a UK and Ireland tour next summer.

"Showcasing the talent of the hugely gifted Cape Town Opera company, this production will offer audiences a wonderful spectacle with its exceptional cast, award-winning chorus and original score.

"I'm delighted we are able to share the story of Nelson Mandela's heroic and inspirational life, two years after his death.

"This tour is another step in the development of collaborative and exchange projects between the centre and our strategic partner – Cape Town Opera."

Mandela Trilogy will be performed at the Royal Festival Hall from 31st August- 3rd September. For more details go to www.southbankcentre.co.uk

Dinner with The Twits

YOU can feast on bird pie and sup on some gruesome cocktails at the Vaults, beneath Waterloo Station next month, where diners are being given the opportunity to join Mr and Mrs Twit as they renew their wedding vows, writes Nicky Sweetland.

From the team that entertained scores of thrill seekers last year with their immersive Alice's Adventures Underground, Les Enfants Terribles theatre company is offering a unique dining experience, which involves one of the most famously horrid homes, ever to have been imagined.

I caught up with producer, Emma Brunjes, who talked me through the concept behind the show, which is the first of Roald Dahl's works ever to have been reproduced for an adult only audience (the show is rated 16years+).

Emma said: "As it's the 100th anniversary of Roald Dahl's birth it felt like a really fitting opportunity to take a much loved text, that the writers Oliver Lansley and Anthony Spargo adore, and create a piece of work just for adults."

The first edition of The Twits was published in 1980 and, with Quentin Blake's infinitely recognisable illustrations, has become one of the nation's favourite family stories. For those who have never ventured into that world the story follows a hideous and vindictive couple, who continuously play mischievous practical jokes on each other. The filthy pair are famed for their cuisine and so the idea of producing a show, which involved some frightful food seemed perfect.

The 'Revolting Recipes' will be recreated by the culinary pairing of Bompas and Parr, who are renowned for their artistic and groundbreaking dishes.

"We love the boys at Bompas and Parr and they were top of our hit list, so we were really excited when they said yes," Emma said.

After a pre-show drink in the bar you are welcomed into the ghastly garden, where you will join the Twits for an evening of madness and mayhem. There is even a very special Muggle-Wump cocktail cavern for you to 'hang out' in afterwards, making the experience a fun and exciting evening, which is perfect to share with friends.

"When you see an audience member come into the world you've created and watch them enjoying the show, it's a phenomenal experience," Emma said.

Dinner at The Twits is running at The Vaults, Waterloo from September 4 - October 30 - www.twitsdinner.com

Kerry Ellis does her bit to cheer on the teams at the football match

Phantom v Les Mis the ultimate challenge

SOME very fancy footwork was on display at Bromley Football Club last weekend, as stars from the West End stage teamed up with celebrity sportsmen for the annual Les Mis versus Phantom football match.

The award winning charity match between the two longest running musicals in the West End saw teams of stagey strikers take to the field to raise funds for Macmillan Cancer support and Brake, the road safety charity.

The beautiful sunshine at Hayes Lane provided the perfect backdrop for the family fun day and gave fans of musical theatre the opportunity to get up close to some of their idols.

Pre-match entertainment was provided by a host of stars, including Titanic the Musical's Rob Houchen, Aladdin's Nathan Amzi and former Miss Saigon, Eva Noblezada, who is currently enjoying an acclaimed spell in Les Misrables, and who wowed audiences with her version of Don't Forget Me from Smash.

The celebrated singer Kerry Ellis, whose husband, Luton Town coach James Townsend, played for the Les Mis team, presented another topnotch turn.

Ellis recently wowed crowds as part of the 1966 World Cup 50th anniversary celebrations at Wembley where she performed the Nancy Sinatra classic These Boots Are Made for Walking. The singer, who will return to the West End in October to take the leading role in the musical Murder Ballad at the Arts Theatre, repeated the number for her scores of fans to a chorus of rousing cheers before the kick off.

The teams for the anticipated competition were made up of performers from the worlds of musicals and sport, with former X-Factor winner Sam Bailey joining the Les Mis side under the management of Gareth Southgate. The England women's manager Mark Sampson presided over the Phantom team, who, once again triumphed after a 90-minute thriller.

Les Mis opened the scoring with an early goal, but the Phantom crew managed to claw one back from Jeremy Rees just before half time to even up the score.

Phantom scored again just after the break with a scuffle in the penalty area leading to a scrappy goal, which gave the Her Majesty's theatre team the edge. They then added another two in just a few minutes to take a 4-1 lead.

Les Mis scraped two back in a late surge, but the Phantom boys dashed their hopes by clocking up another two late goals, which saw them win by six goals to three and crowned as champions.

Andrea Lowe and Nick Le Prevost in How the Other Half Love at the Duke of York Theatre

Engaging, funny, light and beautifully written

Following an enormously successful run at the Theatre Royal Haymarket, the classic social comedy, How the Other Half Loves has transferred to The Duke of York Theatre to continue to tickle the ribs of theatre goers, with Alan Ayckbourn's very unique style of intellectual humour, writes Nicky Sweetland.

Andrea Lowe takes over the role of Teresa Phillips from Tamzin Outhwaite, and joins the all-star cast for the fast paced, farcical comic offering, which is set in the swinging sixties.

Best known for portraying DS Annie Cabbot in the ITV series DCI Banks, Andrea Lowe started her career at the Crucible in Sheffield in Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party and is excited to back on the stage in Ayckbourn's classic tale of social graces and personal misunderstanding.

The play stars Jason Merrells (Lark Rise to Candleford, Waterloo Road), Matthew Cottle (Game On) and Gillian Wright (Eastenders) alongside stage stalwarts, Nicholas Le Prevost and Jenny Seagrove, who have already clocked up over 100 performances of the show.

Andrea told me about the difficulties of joining such an established cast, but receiving tremendous support from her colleagues.

She said: "Everybody has been absolutely wonderful, particularly the cast. I've had a lot of support and even Tamzin (Outhwaite), who left, was really supportive, but it's been a strange process. It's been almost like working from the outside in. During my rehearsal process the rest of the cast were on holiday, so I was mostly rehearsing with just one understudy. It was a really unusual way to work."

Despite the challenges, Andrea has revelled in learning the classic script and making the character her own.

"I'd studied Ayckbourn and knew Ayckbourn, so it was a real privilege to do this one and it's fabulous. The more you listen to it the more you get out of it."

How the Other Half Loves provides a real snapshot of 60s life, in particular how the role of women in society has changed. The level of chauvinism seems quite unfamiliar now.

Andrea continued: "All the female characters have something expected of them which isn't expected of women any more but the interaction between generations is very timeless."

The plot culminates in two disastrous dinner parties on successive nights, shown at the same time, after which the future of all three couples seems in jeopardy.

"That was probably one of the most complicated scenes and probably the least I got to rehearse with all the characters, so it was very nerve racking," Andrea said.

The lightning quick pace of the dialogue and movement, help to maintain the momentum and general feeling of mayhem.

The all-star cast are relishing the opportunity of sharing in the glorious mirth making of the acclaimed writer.

"It's really entertaining, engaging, funny, light and beautifully written. It's just silly, which is fantastic. It's silly but very clever."

How the Other Half Loves continues at the Duke of York Theatre.

MARK HIX'S RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Partridge tagine with olives

Serves 4-6

There are some game birds I wouldn't use for this, like grouse, snipe or woodcock, but partridge and pheasant lend themselves well to a bit of spice and slow cooking. It's also a good way to use up frozen birds.

Ingredients

4 partridges, each cut into 4 pieces
1tbsp flour
4tbsp olive oil
3 medium red onions, peeled and sliced
6 cloves of garlic, peeled and crushed
30g root ginger, peeled and finely grated
1tsp paprika
1tsp ground mace
2tsp ground cumin
1tsp ground cinnamon
1tsp ground cardamom
A good pinch of saffron strands
2tsp tomato purée
1½ litres chicken stock
30 green olives whole or stoned
100-150g raw couscous
2 preserved lemons, quartered

Method

Preheat the oven to 180C/gas mark 5. Season and lightly flour the partridge pieces. Heat half the olive oil in a heavy frying pan and fry them for a couple of minutes on each side, until they are nicely brown. Put to one side.

Meanwhile, in a saucepan with a lid, gently cook the onions in the rest of the olive oil with all the spices for about 10 minutes, stirring every so often until they are soft and beginning to colour. You may need to add a little water if they are sticking to the bottom.

Add the tomato purée and chicken stock, bring to the boil and season. Simmer for 20 minutes, then add the partridge, olives and preserved lemons. Transfer into a tagine or a covered cooking dish and finish in the oven for 1 hour. You may need to add more stock but a tagine shouldn't have too much liquid.

Alfresco dining with an authentic taste of Italy

C'Alice Italian Restaurant, Fulham

WITH the weather finally feeling a bit warmer, an alfresco dining experience with the authentic taste of Italy seems like the perfect way to enjoy an August evening. For a high quality meal at a reasonable price C'Alice on Munster Road in Fulham is a foody paradise, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The charming little restaurant is run by a husband and wife team. With a contemporary interior, it offers a unique blend of both Northern and Southern Italian cuisine, with an excellent knowledge of wine and a passion for history of the regions from which the couple hail.

We chose to sit outside the bi-fold doors and enjoy a cocktail (a cool and fresh peach Bellini) in the warmth with some olives and chorizo to start, before we sampled some stunningly prepared antipasti.

We chose Pannelle E Crocchè Chickpea flour fritters and potato croquettes (fleshy and filled with flavour, £6) and Salmone Marinato Ai 3 Pepi (three pepper marinated salmon with oil, lemon and celery, which was succulent and tangy, £8.50).

Our main meals were equally as impressive and I sampled a Paccheri pesce spada e melanzane (handmade paccheri pasta with swordfish, aubergines and fresh cherry tomatoes, £14) which was both meaty and mellow. My companion selected a heavenly Arrosto Alla Palermitana (pan fried breaded sirloin steak served with salad and chips, £17), which was perfectly cooked and as a finale we tried a Crème brûlée and some real Italian gelato, both of which were exquisite.

After a couple of glasses of rosé and an espresso, we were filled with a warm tranquility and an assurance that C'Alice is a restaurant, which definitely deserves a return visit.

C'Alice is on Munster Road in Fulham. If you would like any further information or to look at the menu, you can visit the website calice-restaurant.com/

CONDITIONS OF ACCEPTANCE
FOR ALL ADVERTISEMENTS

Orders are accepted by the Publishers subject to the Standard Conditions agreed between the Newspaper Society and the Institute of Practitioners in Advertising. Save that:

1. Advertisements are accepted on the conditions that (a) descriptions relating to goods are accurate and in no way contravene the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, and the Fair Trading Act 1973, and (b) the copy complies with the British Code of Advertising Practice. Advertisements offering credit or hire facilities must conform to the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 1980.

2. Classified Advertisers offering goods or service of a business, commercial or trade nature will, at the discretion of the Publishers, be deemed "Trade Advertisers", and as such, must include their names in advertisements. A telephone number is an optional addition to these requirements and not an alternative.

To comply with the Business Advertisements (Disclosure) Order 1977, Trade Advertisers must make it clear that they are selling goods in the course of business either by content, format, size or place of the advertisement or by including words such as "trade", "dealer", "agent", "wholesaler", "IT" etc. in the advertisement.

3. The Publishers accept no liability whatsoever for any loss or damage however caused arising out of:

(a) Any error, inaccuracy or omission in the printing or publishing of any advertisement;

(b) Any failure to publish an advertisement on the day / date or day / dates specified by the advertiser; or

(c) Any delay in forwarding or omission to forward replies to box numbers to the Advertiser.

4. The Publishers will endeavour to publish advertisements on the day / date or day / dates specified by the Advertiser but insertion days / dates cannot be guaranteed.

5. Where shrinkage of advertisement occurs for whatever reason the advertisement will be charged to the nearest full centimetre. This will NOT apply to the full-page advertisements, which remain full pages even after shrinkage.

6. The Publishers reserve the right to reject an advertisement or to vary it in any way they deem fit, at any time before publication, whether or not the advertisement has already been accepted for publication.

7. Whilst every effort is made to minimise errors in advertisements, mistakes do sometimes occur. Advertisers or their agents should therefore check their advertisements and inform us of any errors immediately. Responsibility cannot be accepted for more than one incorrect insertion. Typographical or minor changes, which do not affect the value of the advertisement, do not qualify for republishing or allowances.

8. All gross advertising rates (except classified listings and semi-displays) are subject to and include a 9.1% Advertising Standards Board of Finance surcharge, payable by the advertiser to help finance the self-regulatory control system administered by the Advertising Standards Authority.

9. All rates quoted are subject to VAT at the rate currently in force at the time the advertisement appears.

10. Should the rate for advertisements be altered the price for remaining insertions shall be revised accordingly or the publishers shall have the right to cancel the unexpired portion of the order.

11. The placing of an advertisement order will be deemed an acceptance of these conditions.

12. Account facilities are granted at the discretion of the Company.

13. All accounts must be settled within the terms agreed by the Company and the Customer.

(1) Should an advertiser be in breach of the agreed terms, the publisher shall be entitled to levy a 10% surcharge on the value of the whole debt in respect of accounts with terms of less than 30 days, and any discounts or commissions that had been allowed will be reclaimed.

(2) Regular monthly accounts that are in breach of the agreed terms will pay an interest rate of 6% above the current bank of England base rate for each month that the account is overdue and discounts or commissions that had been allowed will be reclaimed. Should Legal action be required the interest will be charged in accordance with the County Court Act 1984.

14. Where an advertiser instructs / appoints an advertising agent to act on their behalf, the advertiser will remain jointly and severally liable for payment in respect for an advertisement(s) should the appointed agent fail to pay. For the avoidance of doubt, the agent acts for the advertiser and not for the publisher with the agent being responsible for notifying the advertiser of this liability.

15. All queries must be notified, preferably in writing to the accounts department of the publisher within 7 days of the invoice date.

16. All digital services are maintained in partnership with the publishers' hosting service providers. Every effort is made to ensure the continuity of these services, but some occasional technical downtime beyond the publishers control may occur. The publisher and its associated companies shall be under no liability if the production and distribution of web services is delayed or prevented by any cause beyond the control of the publisher.

17. The Publisher may provide voucher copies for published advertisements in electronic form only subject to certain criteria. Further information is available on request.

18. The copyright of advertisements produced wholly or partially by the Publishers belongs to the Publishers. Advertisers may not reproduce such advertisements without the Publishers' consent.

Box Numbers

Boxes are open for the receipt of bona fide answers and are not available for distribution of trade canvassing matter. Original testimonials, goods, cash, cash stamps or payments of any kind must not be enclosed. A box Number and postal address are charged as part of the advertisement, i.e. Box No., centre address. Rangers first to grab top spot

IF only the league season would end today. Two consecutive wins in the Championship, with five goals scored and none conceded, left Queens Park Rangers looking down on the rest of the second tier from top spot ahead of this Wednesday's (Aug 17) visit to Barnsley.

And there was satisfaction, too, in a midweek penalty shootout victory against Swindon Town in the League Cup – the competition Rangers won in such glorious fashion almost 50 years ago – to complement their impressive league victories over Leeds United and Cardiff City.

Confused R's fans are pinching themselves. They are in nosebleed territory, bracing themselves for when the wheels come off.

Or is there now genuine cause for optimism that a play-off place is a realistic possibility after all? It's far too early to make such bold assumptions, so I'll continue to reserve judgement until at least six matches have been played and a pattern develops in this most unpredictable of leagues.

Understandably, manager Jimmy Floyd Hasselbaink is urging caution amid the mini euphoria sweeping Shepherd's Bush. After second half goals by Steve Caulker and Tjaronn Chery gave his side a well deserved 2-0 victory at Cardiff on Sunday, he said: "We're not getting carried away, far from it. It's nice to be where we are but that is not our focus. "Our focus is to keep improving, keep being competitive and keep focusing on the next game."

But Hasselbaink wouldn't deny his team the credit they deserved. "It's a pleasure working with these players every day," he added. "It was a really strong away performance. We played very, very well. Defensively, it was flawless.

Very happy

"Offensively, we could impose ourselves better at times and be even more dominant than we were but, overall, I am very happy.

"Three points away from home is what we came here for – and it was what we deserved." Caulker opened the scoring 14 minutes from time against his former club with a superb towering header, before Dutchman Chery put the icing on the cake in the 85th minute, with a coolly-taken spot-kick.

"The key was to stay patient," said Hasselbaink. "We kept working, we kept knocking on the door and eventually we got the breakthrough our performance deserved. "I'm being picky if I find many faults. As a team, as a unit, we were excellent – and that is a platform we can work from going forward."

On goalscorer Caulker, who again shone at the heart of a QPR defence who have yet to concede a shot on target in the league, he added: "Steven was exceptional – but he was part of a very good performance.

"He is a leader, he is respected by his teammates and he showed again today he's a very good player.

"It was a great header and gave us a lift to go on and win the game."

After their trek to South Yorkshire to play Barnsley, Hoops head back to W12 on Saturday when they meet early strugglers Preston North End, who were beaten 2-1 at home by Fulham on Saturday.

There is more action at Loftus Road next Tuesday (Aug 23), when revitalised R's fans will expect to see their favourites progress against Rochdale in the League Cup second round.

BETTIN£ BANTER

■ FULHAM were one of the best bets to progress from the first round of the League Cup.

Despite beating title favourites Newcastle in their first Championship outing of the season, Whites were an appealing 11/10 against to win at Leyton Orient last week and did so with a 3-2 victory over the fourth tier strugglers that was more comfortable than the result suggests. O's salvaged respectability with two late goals.

You could have got an even bigger 12/5 on Whites to win at Preston, while QPR were slightly shorter 9/4 shots to succeed at Cardiff.

The bookies have reacted quickly to our local teams' unbeaten start in the Championship. Before this week's games, Fulham and QPR were both quoted at 30/1 to win the second tier, their pre-season odds slashed from 50/1 and 40/1 respectively.

A home draw against League Two Rochdale in the next round of the League Cup has also seen R's odds against winning the trophy cut from 250-1 to 200/1 – the same price as Fulham, who face what looks a far trickier tie at home to Middlesbrough.

Wrecked

Hoops needed a penalty shootout to see off Swindon at Loftus Road and their failure to do the business in normal time wrecked my fourfold accumulator, which also included Fulham. It was a schoolboy error – I should've cashed out when Rangers took the lead on the hour, instead of trusting them to hold on for 90 minutes.

Now that the Premier League is underway, attention turns to Chelsea (this was written prior to Monday's first game against West Ham).

I'm backing Pep Guardiola to lead Manchester City to the title at the first attempt but I also rate Antonio Conte highly and can see Blues pushing them all the way. Unlike City, Chelsea won't be distracted by European football and should be hard to beat.

Before facing West Ham, Blues were 11/2 third favourites behind City (23/10) and Man United (3/1), who both won their opening matches.

Good luck and please bet responsibly.

Championship in sight

● COUNTY CRICKET ROUND-UP

■ MIDDLESEX are fully focused on winning the Specsavers County Championship after their defeat by Northamptonshire in the NatWest T20 Blast quarter-final.

Despite winning the toss and electing to bat, Middlesex never really recovered from losing both Dawid Malan and Paul Stirling inside the first two overs and eventually lost by seven wickets at Northampton.

George Bailey top-scored with 46 but the visitors, who had made it out of their group for the first time in eight years, reached just 132-7 at the end of their 20 overs.

Adam Rossington struck 67 not out as Northants clinched their place at finals day with 11 balls remaining.

But while dreams of the treble have crumbled, at least Middlesex still have the first division title clearly in sight.

As LWN went to press they were poised to stretch their lead at the top of CC1 with victory over Durham at Lord's, where centuries for the two Nicks, Gubbins (145) and Compton (131), had put the home side in complete command at the end of day two (Sunday).

Having bowled out Durham in their first innings for 204, Middlesex had rattled along to 408-6 in the weekend sunshine at the Home of Cricket.

■ IT WAS Surrey who pipped Middlesex to a quarter-final berth in the Royal London One-Day Cup and the Brown Caps will be hoping to progress to the last four of the 50-over competition when they face Northants at Northampton this Thursday (Aug 18 at 1.30pm).

Although currently struggling in seventh place in Division Two of the Championship, Northants proved their limited overs credentials by topping the northern ODC group and, as reported above, knocked Middlesex out of the T20 comp.

Conte: 'we're ready for the fight'

■ CHELSEA: Continued from back page will help him. It's important if you want to win to have talented players, but it's important also to create the right spirit.

"Expectations for every team are very high," continued Conte. "After a bad season like last year we are working very hard to be ready to start. We know this season will be very tough for every team in every game.

"I think last season was bad for all the players, not just one, two or three. It's important we don't forget last season, because if we remember it we have more strength. But now we have to think about the present and build a good future for Chelsea, for our fans and the club.

"There are many great clubs who can fight to win the title, fantastic players with great talent. There are also good managers. It will be a great battle and I'm excited. My players are also excited. We have a good situation to fight with the others and we're ready."

■ ONE ex-player confident that Blues can return to glory is Frank Lampard.

Chelsea's all-time leading scorer is plying his trade in the USA for New York City and has been banging in the goals for the MLS side.

But the 38-year-old still keeps up to speed with goings-on in SW6, where he proved himself one of the most outstanding midfielders of his generation in a glittering career spanning 13 years that brought him 211 goals in 648 appearances.

"Being at Chelsea for such a long time I have an allegiance, so I would obviously like them to win the league and I think they'll be back challenging.

"I do fancy it being between Chelsea and Manchester City this year. I spoke to Andrea Pirlo about Antonio Conte and he had nothing but great things to say.

"He works the lads very hard in training with his fitness work and organisation on the pitch. The players will need to buy into that and respect that, and then you'll see an improvement from last year."

■ ON the youth front, Chelsea have farmed out centre-back Michael, who has gone on loan to German side Eintracht Frankfurt. Also expected to move out is 20-year-old Brazilian Kenedy, who will join Watford this week.

The U23 development side began their Premier League 2 season with a creditable 1-1 draw against Sunderland, who conceded an own-goal.

The U18s defeated Fulham 3-2 in their first Premier League fixture of the season on Saturday. A brace from Harvey St Clair and a goal by Martell Taylor-Crossdale were enough to see off their local rivals.

Manager Jody Morris said: "It's a win but we feel a bit frustrated because we started the game so well and in the first half hour I thought we were excellent. We kept them pinned in their half, were moving the ball quickly and had total control, so to be 2-0 up was just rewards really.

"Yet we ended the half a little shaky and looked quite vulnerable on the counter-attack."

● RUGBY LEAGUE

■ HAMMERSMITH Hills Hoists secured their place in the Grand Final with a 30-point semi-final victory against Eastern Rhinos in a physical and fast paced encounter on Saturday.

The deadlock was broken against the run of play, when Eastern's winger ran the length of the pitch after good ball movement straight from a scrum.

Hoists quickly returned fire with a try under the posts by Gerard Arthurs following great support running after a line break 20 metres from Rhinos' line. Their persistent pressure told in the second half and they were able to pull away from their opponents to make the final score 36-6.

Man of the match went to Lynton 'Angry Red' Allen, whose kick returns and ball work in the attacking zone put Hoists on the front foot.

The Grand Final against local rivals Wests Warriors is at Chiswick Rugby Club on Saturday. With Wests primarily made up of players of Kiwi origin and Hoists fielding mainly Aussies, it's certain to be a fiery encounter, with bragging rights and national pride also coming to the fore.

Blues told to increase bids

ROMELU Lukaku should be a Chelsea player again in a matter of days, with Roman Abramovich looking to part with the thick end of £135million this week.

Well, that's the hope of director of football Michael Emenalo, who is coming under increasing pressure to land the big-name hitman before the transfer window closes on August 31.

Blues are being forced to up their derisory offers for the Everton striker – it's understood that a £42m bid was routinely rejected by the Merseysiders last week.

Chelsea are hoping that a drip, drip increase will see the Toffeemen relent and let the Belgium forward leave Goodison Park for below their £75m valuation.

Lukaku was allegedly unfit for Everton's league opener on Saturday, a 1-1 draw with Spurs, although it is likely that neither they nor Chelsea wanted him to play and risk possible injury, which might have jeopardised the transfer.

To help clear the way for Lukaku, they have allowed Bukino Faso striker Bertrand Traore to join Dutch side

Ajax on a year-long loan. His temporary move from SW6 was softened by a new three-year contract at Stamford Bridge. And there is a number nine shirt just waiting for him on his return.

An attempt to firm up a deal to bring Napoli centre-back Kalidou Koulibaly to west London is becoming problematic. Chelsea will have to meet Napoli's valuation of £50m for the Senegal strongman and their current transfer strategy appears to be failing.

Full asking price

Abramovich will have to loosen the purse strings, as selling clubs are fully aware that Chelsea are a wounded animal following last season's disastrous 10th-placed finish. Only by paying the full asking price will Blues nab their men and feel confident that they can compete for major honours this season.

They are also looking to bolster their midfield with a £15m bid for Santos' 19-year-old Thiago Maia, who has been with Brazil at the Rio Olympics.

Chelsea have lost out on Sporting Lisbon's Joao Mario, 23, who looks to be heading to Italy with Inter Milan in a £39m deal.

Ahead of Monday's opening Premier League game against West Ham United, played after LWN went to press, Blues had made just two summer signings in striker Michy Batshuayi and midfielder N'Golo Kante.

Coach Antonio Conte was as diplomatic as his limited English allowed when talking about the club's attempts to improve the squad.

"I speak every day with the club, we have a plan and we know the market is very crazy in different aspects. We must be patient to find the right solution for the team. It's important to improve the squad but right now I'm very happy to work with these players because they've shown me great commitment every day and that is important for me.

"Every single club wants to improve because they want to fight for the title and I think every club adapts its transfer policy to their own ideas. Chelsea is waiting for the right solution but at this moment it's not easy.

"It's a crazy transfer market because when you try to buy a player the cost is very expensive and not the real valuation. It's a very strange situation."

■ AFTER facing West Ham at home, Blues now have a tricky away match at Watford to come on Saturday. A good start will allow Conte some time to cement his ideas but defeats will heap instant pressure on the Italian.

Whatever the result against the Hammers, Conte, like most managers, will be having trouble sleeping.

He said: "Before the games, usually I don't sleep a lot. I sleep for two, three hours. When I wake up, I start to think about the game, the situation, and often I have a good idea on a tactical aspect in the first hours of the morning."

He revealed: "After the game, when I win I sleep, but when I don't win it's very difficult for me. In the middle of the night I think, 'what is the reason we lost?' Sometimes I watch the match again very quickly because I want to find an answer. 'Why? Where is the situation that creates more difficulties? Which is the player that creates more difficulties? Was our tactical plan good or not good?' I need to have the answers quickly.

Understand

"I have a great wife, a great daughter. They understand me because they know me, my passion, my habit of working a lot and I think my wife knows that now I am here for this reason – for my passion to work, to improve myself, to always put myself in competition. I am lucky because I have a wife and daughter who understand this."

Since entering management in 2006 Conte has led Bari to the Serie B title and guided Juventus to three consecutive Italian scudettos before being appointed national manager. When dealing with his players, he draws on his experience of a distinguished playing career spanning more than 300 games with Juve that earned him 20 full international caps.

He said: "I think that all the players are important to fight to win the title. In my experience, as a player and now as a manager, I have always thought that if every single player is part of the team, probably you have a great possibility to win. If only one player, or two players, are part of the team it is very, very difficult because the team needs all the squad, all the players, who play or don't play in the game. It's important for this reason to create the right spirit in the team if you want to return very soon to fight for a title. I don't think any single player can change that situation."

"Every single player's ready to help his team-mate because he knows in another situation his team-mate

Focus on Craven Cottage

By TONY McDONALD

Best start for 15 years

THREE victories in eight days gave Fulham the perfect start to the new season ahead of Tuesday's visit to Leeds United.

After stunning title favourites Newcastle United on the opening night at Craven Cottage, Whites won 3-2 in the League Cup at Leyton Orient and recorded their second Championship success of the campaign with a 2-1 win at Preston North End on Saturday.

The fact that it's the first time Fulham have won consecutive league games at the start of the season in 15 years didn't escape the notice of head coach Slaviša Jokanović.

"It's a very good start for us," he admitted.

"Fulham haven't won their first two opening (league) games since the 2000-01 season.

"It's an important start for us and I have to be happy with how we played for many minutes in the game but at the same time we've got a very, very long season in front of us.

"We won two games and these points could be important for us in the spring. All I'm focused and thinking about is the next game. It's Leeds away and a new chance for us to fight for three points, and let's try to take this chance."

Sone Aluko gave red-shirted Fulham the lead at Preston in the 33rd minute with a close-range header following a diabolical mix-up in the home defence. Matt Smith, the slayer of Newcastle, hit the target midway through the second half when he slotted the rebound after his first shot was saved. This followed a surging 50-yard run by chief creator Tom Cairney.

Preston pulled a goal back through a Callum Robinson header with 20 minutes left on the clock but their hopes of snatching a late equaliser were dashed when Jermaine Beckford's header from six yards was ruled offside.

After their midweek trip to Leeds, Whites return to SW6 on Saturday to face Cardiff City, before hosting newly-promoted Premier League side Middlesbrough in the second round of the League Cup next Wednesday (Aug 24).

The cup date with Boro could mark the debut of latest signing, the curiously named 25-year-old Jozabed, who was unveiled at The Cottage last Friday after signing a three-year contract following his move from Spanish side Rayo Vallecano for an undisclosed fee.

Midfielder Jozabed – full name Jozabed Sánchez Ruiz – told fulhamfc.com: "I consider myself a technical player. I like to have the ball at my feet and help the team in any way I can. I like to dictate the game and I hope I can do a great job for the fans.

"It is a new league and a new way of playing the game. Having taken part in training and spoken to the gaffer I can see the style we want to play and I think I will fit in.

"I am looking forward to it. I hope to play for Fulham in a similar way to how I did in La Liga, with a high passing rate and quick forward movement."

Jozabed scored 10 goals in 50 league appearances for Rayo since joining them two years ago from second division Real Jaen. However, Rayo paid the price for their natural attacking instincts by suffering relegation at the end of last season.

"I play anywhere in the centre of midfield or slightly forward," he added. "Last year I played in a more attacking role, just behind the striker. It was new for me and I did well, and scored a few goals."
